Contents
Looking at the tradition of the magisterium of the Church as well as topical issues, the lecture on the doctrine of the sacraments equips students with a grounding in theoretical perspectives on communication. It discusses the administration of the sacraments in general, and baptism, confirmation, and eucharist in particular, from the points of view of anthropology, christology, and ecclesiology. The lecture on eschatology explains Christian hope in the face of death from the points of view of general and individual eschatology and discusses it based on biblical and magisterial sources. The lecture on missiology discusses our understanding of missionary activity today as well as topical issues in the dialogue of religions.
Intended learning outcomes
At the end of the course, students will have become familiar with the understanding of sacraments as communicative acts and will have developed an awareness of the changes that our understanding of the concept of the sacrament has undergone in the tradition of the magisterium of the Church and the history of theology. They will be able to formulate a theology of baptism, confirmation, and eucharist that is appropriate in contemporary times. In addition, students will have become familiar with key concepts and problems in eschatology, including but not limited to the kingdom of God and contemporary concepts of resurrection. They will have developed the ability to explain Christian hope in the face of death from the points of view of general and individual eschatology. They will have become familiar with our understanding of missionary activity today as well as topical issues in, and challenges associated with, the dialogue of religions.
