Contents
The course has the character of a workshop that accompanies and assists students in the process of projecting and writing their master's theses. It starts out from and returns to the participants' ongoing research projects. On this basis, the course deals not only with general questions concerning academic writing and research techniques but also with concrete concerns raised by individual topics. Offering specimens of their own work, the participants are expected to engage in discussion about their individual research questions and methods. The course can be attended by students who are currently in the process of writing a thesis in the field of English Literature and British Cultural Studies.
Intended learning outcomes
By successfully participating in the module students learn how to conceptualize a specific field of research in literary and cultural studies and how to place and frame their own research in that field. This comprises the following concrete competencies: time management; research techniques; structuring academic writing on macro and micro levels; formulating operable research questions; fruitfully positioning oneself in relation to complex debates in literary or cultural studies; using and critically pondering scholarly concepts, methods and theories in autonomous research projects; presenting one's own research adequately in terms of methodology, conceptualization and theorization.
