Literature and cultural practices I – The early modern period and the Enlightenment: This module will draw on central current research questions and approaches in order to teach authors, genres and concepts relevant to the time from the beginning of the early modern period to beginning of the Enlightenment (i.e. from the early 16th to the middle of the 18th centuries). The focus is on: (1) specific developments in the literary system, in aesthetics and in the history of ideas as they were evolving through the reception or transformation of models from classical antiquity or continental Europe (classicism, humanism, Petrarchism, the Enlightenment, the discourse of sensibility); (2) historical practices of text production and reception (such as print culture and the emergence of the public sphere, patronage and the literary market, theatre and production practices, the novel and the reading public); and (3) the political and social contexts of cultural production (e.g. discourses of the nation, the Reformation and confessional conflicts, colonisation and trade, gender hierarchies).
Intended learning outcomes
By successfully participating in the module students gain a deepened understanding not only of the most important genres and the defining aesthetic developments in the literature of the early modern period, the Restoration and the Enlightenment but also of the fundamental social and political developments of the epoch. This will provide them with the competency of situating authors and texts from the early 16th to the mid-18th centuries in literary, intellectual, media and cultural history. Participants will also learn how to gauge the interdependencies between text, form, medium and cultural situation – and thus the specific cultural work of literary texts – in a clearly differentiated manner and in view of the current research discussion.
