"Language and culture": In this module, the most important aspects of the interrelation of language and culture are addressed. The module exemplarily (e.g., with regard to English in Asia, Africa or in the South Pacific) discusses the influence of cultural experiences and conventions of a language community on the function of linguistic structures.
Intended learning outcomes
After attending the module, students will be able to comprehend, classify, and critically discuss connections and relations between different cultures with regard to their linguistic features. By means of linguistic data, they will be able to identify structural and functional differences and to discuss them in the view of current models and theories.
