Contents
The module discusses in two courses China's ongoing process of societal modernization and its various challenges. On the one hand it offers an historical overview of typical issues of societal challenges such as ethnic minority policies or social (protest and democracy) movements. On the other hand students can intensify specific issues in seminar form that may for example cover such aspects as the situation of women or the phenomenon of suicide. The module addresses students in an advanced stage of the study program.
Intended learning outcomes
Students learn to identify and understand processes of societal change in their historical and political contexts. They are acquainted with various academic and methodological approaches to the phenomena of social change and are able to critically reflect on them.
