Module coordinator: Holder of the Chair of Contemporary Chinese Studies

Module offered by: Institute of East and South Asian Cultural Studies

ECTS: 5

Method of grading: Numerical grade

Duration: 1 semester

Module level: Undergraduate

Other prerequisites: Basic knowledge of China's recent history and political structure is prerequisites for this module.

Contents:
The module consists of two courses that address various contemporary issues. As China's development has been of high intensity for more than thirty years, this module allows for the introduction of up to date topical issues beyond a specific determination of content. The module introduces recent trends in China's society, politics and economy and exemplifies them with specific case studies. Basic knowledge of China's recent history and political structure are prerequisites for this module.

Intended learning outcomes:
The module provides students with the competence to develop and analyze recent topical issues relating to China's societal, political and economic development by accessing relevant sources. The competences acquired within this module prepare especially for the writing of the Bachelor thesis.
