| From the third semester onwards, the module offers students access to the language and history of Japan. The focus is on Japan's interaction with China and other neighbouring countries in East Asia. In the Japanese crash course, students are first provided with the basics of the Japanese language, which can be expanded upon, by drawing on previously acquired knowledge of the Chinese language. In addition to basic grammar structures and vocabulary, this includes the active and passive use of the writing systems. In particular, technical training is given in the communication and research-oriented pronunciation of Sino-Japanese terms with reference to China. Apart from a compact chronological overview regarding the history of Japan, the module offers an introduction to cultural, economic and political contacts with mainland Asia and the West since the 19th century. | | |
| Intended learning outcomes | | |
| Students are able to independently classify events in Japanese history chronologically and thematically. They have the basic knowledge of independent and in-depth familiarisation with further questions of historical and current contacts between China and Japan. | | |
