Contents
In this module, questions about either the psychological or the social basics of music production and music reception are studied. The student gets an overview of the systematic subject areas of music psychology or music sociology with their respective subject-specific questions and methods and learns to apply these to current and music-historical subject matters.
Intended learning outcomes
Students have knowledge of either the subject of Music Psychology or the subject of Music Sociology with its most important methodological approaches. They are able to consider musical phenomena and works of art from the perspective of music psychology or music sociology and to classify the specific findings in the general understanding of music.
