Contents
In this module, the regional conditions and characteristics of music from different cultures are studied. The subject matter is the networking and exchange with other regional cultures. Specific regional music traditions are taken into account, such as their stylistic characteristics, transmission modalities or features resulting from the spatial mobility of musicians. Empirical, source-critical or text-critical methods as well as comparative analyses are applied, for example with regard to regional transfer processes, characteristics of musical forms or regional traditions of music practice.
Intended learning outcomes
The student has an idea of the geographical spectrum and the regionally differentiated diversity of global music cultures and their partly intense connectedness. He/she is able to develop and research processes and phenomena shaped by regional music and to classify them in cultural or intercultural contexts.
