Contents
In the module, essential and advanced theories of rhetoric, policies and politics will be debated also regarding their conflicting relationship. In the module, the educational theoretical root and significance of scientific rhetoric will be discussed, as well as its performance in politics. Through this approach, a focus is also laid on a central paradigm of action theory in educational studies.
Intended learning outcomes
Students understand the importance of rhetoric, political questions and problems within educational studies. Graduates have a broad knowledge of the systematics of rhetoric theory and can take a well-founded stance. They can discuss essential theories of argumentation as well as use them profoundly when engaging in political discourse.
