Intended learning outcomes
Professional competence: The students are able to reasonably select and evaluate test methods according to the corresponding linguistic level. They decide whether therapy is needed based on the diagnostic results and determine therapy priorities by applying their knowledge of chronology of development. Implementation competence: The students are able to employ different test methods in a patient-oriented manner. They are able to evaluate and interpret the diagnostic results whilst taking into account linguistic and extralinguistic areas of development. Social-communicative competence: The students are able to adjust their verbal and non-verbal behaviour to the respective test situation. Personal competence: By taking care of time management and structure, the students are able to take on the role of the therapist during diagnostics. They show appreciation for the patient. Reflection competence: The students evaluate their therapeutic attitude as well as their responses to patients. They reconsider the selection and execution of test methods applied in view of an ICF-oriented therapy planning.
