Contents
We discuss early theoretical concepts and their development or modification (for example Georgens/Deinhardt) in the context of current theories (for example WHO, inclusion) as well as their effects on scientific research. We examine society's attitude towards disabilities and the development of individual and social identity in the context of disabilities (possibly in the context of specific types of disability). Furthermore, we talk about possibilities of social empathy and ways of improvement as well as aspects of attitude change. We elaborate on these topics in the field of speech and language disorders.
Intended learning outcomes
Professional competence: The students have advanced knowledge of specific theoretical concepts in the context of disabilities. Reflection competence: The students are able to evaluate and professionally discuss the connections between disabilities and social contexts. Personal competence: The students are aware of the problems connected to disabilities in general and those connected to speech disorders.
