Content and Objectives of the Programme

The Master's degree programme Lateinische Philologie (Latin Philology) equips Latin philology majors with advanced information and data gathering skills and an advanced knowledge of the Latin language and enables them to develop a combined scholarly profile. While those sections of the programme that develop the students' language skills focus on grammar, translation, and the investigation of the meaning of complex texts, the sections developing the students' knowledge and skills in the academic discipline focus on linguistics, literature as well as classical studies and/or general cultural studies.

The Master's programme systematically consolidates the Latin language skills Latin philology majors have developed in the Bachelor's programme. It equips students with comprehensive skills in the analytical and hermeneutic reading of literary texts from classical antiquity and investigates the reception of these texts in antiquity, the Middle Ages, and the modern period.

While the information gathering and presentation skills (portfolio, position paper with presentation, term paper) students develop while studying in this programme are useful for virtually all career paths that involve the gathering, processing, and communication of information, the traditional areas of employment for graduates of this programme include (in addition to research and higher education) publishing, the media (press, TV, and radio), continuing education, and the management of cultural institutions.

The Master's programme focuses, among other aspects, on the reception of Latin literature in the early modern period (New Latin), a key research interest of the Chair offering the programme. The programme also investigates the material prerequisites for textual transmission and gives students an opportunity to work with and edit texts from antiquity, using modern methods and tools.

Exploring selected aspects of classical antiquity, students develop the ability to assess and historically contextualise phenomena beyond their everyday experience as well as to form an independent opinion, maintaining the critical distance that is necessary to see the bigger picture. Investigating texts from a range of schools of philosophy of antiquity, texts that raised questions that are still relevant for us today, the programme equips students with knowledge that allows them to form an opinion on current ethical, social, and theological issues. The programme takes the reception of Latin literature in a range of epochs into account and thus makes thought patterns clear, not only but also from a diachronic point of view, and trains students in (inter)cultural transfer. Having studied the Latin language, one of the classical languages of Europe, graduates of this programme are able to develop a deeper understanding of Anglo-Saxon, Roman, and Germanic literatures and cultures.

In addition, graduates of this programme have developed an advanced knowledge of Latin philology as well as the ability to independently apply methods in linguistics, literature, and cultural studies to complex problems. Graduates of this programme have obtained an internationally comparable degree in Latin philology and, having successfully completed a Bachelor's and consecutive Master's programme, qualify for admission to a doctoral programme.

Master's thesis: With the help of academic methods, students will deal with a specific problem within a fixed period of time, which is determined by the ASPO. In the case of a Master with two main disciplines, an issue can be given that covers a problem, which affects both main disciplines interdisciplinarily. The topic is to be agreed upon with an authorised examiner or, in the case of an interdisciplinary thesis, 2 authorised examiners. Final oral examination: The candidates will draw up two Latin issues. Usually, two main topics that are proposed by the candidate, will be agreed upon with an authorised examiner (which will consist of one author of Latin prose literature and one author of Latin poetry). The basic selection of publications and academic literature will be agreed between the candidate and examiner. The oral examination focuses on the translation ability, technical knowledge and its academical classification as well as on an appropriate representation in words.

Intended learning outcomes

Master's thesis: Students are able to work on a specific issue of Latin Philology with the help of academic methods and they are able to present their results in writing appropriately. Final oral examination: The candidate is expected to have a comprehensive linguistic and contentual knowledge of selected issues. The candidate is able to understand, classify and critically apply the skills that have already been acquired, adequately and academically. The candidate is able to translate a text passage competently, to reply to questions in free speech and to contribute to an academic and professional exchange during a dialogue competently.
