| The module focuses on financial and management accounting, their functions, possible configurations as well as their impact on internal and external recipients under consideration of the institutional setting. In this context, an economic perspective has priority over detailed legal arrangements and regulations by the standard setters. Based on the theoretical foundations of information economics as well as decision-making and balance sheet theories, questions regarding cost accounting, management control systems, behavioral control and decision-making functions of accounting, quality of financial reporting, and publicity are discussed. |                   |                                      |

| Initially, students acquire a fundamental knowledge of the conception and impact of management and financial accounting as information systems, as well as the economic impacts of the configuration of management and financial accounting. They understand analytical and empirical models from relevant research literature and can interpret and explain the results. Upon completion of the course, the students are able to assess and evaluate the impacts of changes in institutional general frameworks such as changes in valuation standards, publicity rules or regulations about the distribution of profits in enterprises and on capital markets.     |                   |                                      |

| The course discusses advanced approaches for modelling and solving decision problems in business settings. The acquired insights are used to design and implement decision support systems using standard software tools (Python).                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |                   |                                      |                  |

| As businesses expand, the complexity of managing and reporting financial information across multiple subsidiaries and countries increases dramatically. Group accounting is crucial for companies operating on a large scale, as it involves consolidating diverse financial data into a single, cohesive set of financial statements that reflect the financial status of the entire corporation. This module covers the necessary knowledge to prepare and interpret consolidated financial statements under the International Financial Reporting Standards (IFRS). We will discuss the basic principles of group accounting and provide in-depth knowledge of the relevant standards. Students get to know the different types of mergers, acquisitions, and investments and the accounting methods needed to inform stakeholders about these activities. Students learn why consolidated financial statements are relevant and how the consolidation process works. In addition, we cover various recent topics in group accounting, e.g., the treatment of goodwill and why regulating it is becoming increasingly difficult. Outline <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Economic principles of group accounting</li><li>• Scope of consolidation</li><li>• Preliminary measures</li><li>• Capital consolidation</li><li>• Debt consolidation</li><li>• Consolidation of revenues and expenses</li><li>• At-equity consolidation</li></ul> |                   |                                      |                 |

| In today's rapidly changing economic landscape, the ability to effectively analyze financial information is more critical than ever. Financial analysis is essential for interpreting past and current financial data to make predictions about future performance and guide strategic decisions that affect the overall business. This module offers students the tools and methodologies needed to evaluate the financial position of companies, assess investment opportunities, and make informed financial decisions. We provide a basic understanding of financial statement analysis, particularly on how to extract value-relevant information from financial statements, carry out financial statement analysis, and use financial data to value corporations. Outline <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Introduction to financial analysis</li><li>• Analysis of earnings information</li><li>• Analysis of balance sheet information</li><li>• Analysis of cash flows</li><li>• Analysis of selected balance sheet positions</li></ul> |                   |                                      |                 |

| The course discusses advanced approaches for modelling and solving decision problems in business settings. The acquired insights are used to design and implement decision support systems using standard software tools (Python).                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |                   |                                      |

| In this course, you will learn the fundamentals for developing, deploying and maintaining machine learning systems in companies (MLOps). This includes an understanding of the associated IT infrastructure as well as staffing and organizational forms for managing machine learning and data science teams. You will refine and test your skills by practicing the theoretical concepts during exercise sessions. This includes a team project, where you and your peers will develop and deploy your own machine learning system. |                   |                                      |

| The lecture names introductory relevant communication models. Furthermore, the theoretical models of PR are discussed. The added value of communication for companies, business, politics, and science is explained. The discrepancy between journalism and PR is discussed, as well as the basic elements, instruments, goals, and forms of PR. The preparation and implementation of press meetings, conferences, campaigns, and events will be systematically explained, and the central aspects of corporate communications will be outlined. The exercise deals with the practical implementation of journalistic styles in the various media and provides an overview of the possibilities and concepts of PR work across different media and target groups. |                   |                                      |

| After participating in the module courses, students are able to understand and apply PR and its forms, elements as well as methods and in a holistic context. Students learn professional competencies in the field of (business) communication with regard to reflection, argumentation, and exchange as a PR consultant in different areas. In addition, students will be able to apply concrete PR instruments in practice and prepare them professionally.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |                   |                                      |

| This module focuses on the relationship of offer characteristics with benefit aspects for the end consumer and the business models on the part of the providers. Starting from the basics of editorial work and professional text management, the new forms of communication management in social networks are presented. The focus of the lecture is on the use of social media in campaigns (Facebook, Twitter, Instagram, Tiktok). There will also be exercises on various Web 2.0 applications (e.g. online social networks) and on the collection and interpretation of online market research data. Crisis communication of companies will also be covered – in particular opinion-makers on the web as well as protest culture on the web.                                    |                   |                                      |

| By participating in the module courses, students acquire job-specific skills in research and interviewing. Students are able to collect and organize information according to criteria of topicality and relevance. In addition, students are taught journalistic expertise so that they are able to recognize the forms of presentation of news, reports, and background reports with their media characteristics and communicative functions in different media genres and create them themselves. Students will be able to prototype and design a social media campaign, describe the editorial and technical approach including feedback, response, and customer engagement. In addition, students will be able to design counter-strategies for corporate communication crises. |                   |                                      |

| Online and cross-media journalism takes into account the current media convergence. This seminar focuses on the individual elements and phases of production for the website, Facebook, Instagram, Twitter, and Tiktok against the background of current trends and developments. In addition, the seminar covers current trends in journalism. In addition to content-related topics, the focus is also on new methods (e.g. of storytelling) as well as technical developments. A technical introduction to equipment and editing will be given during the seminar. |                   |                                      |

| In this seminar, students learn the basics of audiovisual forms of presentation (news, background report, reportage). They are first introduced to the use of cameras and editing. Students learn how to set news and stories in the picture and how to organize shoots. Television-specific journalistic basics such as the structure and design of a television report, organization, and handling of different filming situations, creating storyboards, copywriting, and speaking are learned. |                   |                                      |

| More than 70 percent of Germans* use the Internet on their smartphones, and billions of users around the world use apps such as WhatsApp, Instagram, and TikTok to communicate every day - much of digital communication now takes place on mobile devices. Social media, messenger services and mobile-optimized websites are now a natural part of any communications mix. The challenge for professional communicators is to adequately consider the mobile delivery channels for their content. The seminar is hands-on and teaches participants how to produce content with the smartphone for the smartphone. It covers the basics of mobile reporting, current apps and their features, different content formats and user behavior. |                   |                                      |

| In this seminar, students will learn how to produce content with the smartphone for the smartphone. In addition to the basics of mobile reporting, students will learn about the latest apps, their features, different content formats and user behavior. In the practical phase of the seminar, students will design and produce targeted content for social media apps.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |                   |                                      |

| This course deals with tax effects on fundamental economic decisions. Taxes are integrated into standard models for investment decisions, financing decisions, firm valuation, dividend policy and remuneration of employees. Therefore, the interaction of corporate and personal income taxes is analysed. Part I <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. Introduction</li> <li>2. | The module discusses tax aspects (legal facts as well as economic effects) of cross-border business activities. Students become familiar with the principles of international taxation, relevant aspects of German income tax law, the function of double taxation treaties as well as recent developments of taxation within the European Union (mostly triggered by the Court of Justice of the European Union). The topics are introduced in the form of lectures. Complex case studies are used for an in-depth discussion of selected aspects.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |                   |                                      |

| This course deals with tax aspects of the choice and change of legal form of business activities. Static and dynamic models are used to calculate the effective tax burden from ongoing business activities but also from a-periodic measures like divestments, mergers, or changes of the legal form. Our perspective is that of an investor resident in Germany investing in incorporated and unincorporated businesses in Germany and abroad.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |                   |                                      |                  |

| After completing the course "Tax Policy" students know the most important tax revenues in Germany and how they are divided between the Federation and the federal provinces. They are able to explain the incidence of specific taxes using simple case studies. Finally they can discuss tax induced distortions of individual decisions using simple partial equilibrium models.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |                   |                                      |

| After completing this module students have a basic understanding of what is meant with "optimal taxation". They are able to apply this concept to specific normative questions of tax policy in practice. Students also learn to prepare and present short papers, where they discuss specific normative policy issues in groups.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |                   |                                      |

| As businesses expand, the complexity of managing and reporting financial information across multiple subsidiaries and countries increases dramatically. Group accounting is crucial for companies operating on a large scale, as it involves consolidating diverse financial data into a single, cohesive set of financial statements that reflect the financial status of the entire corporation. This module covers the necessary knowledge to prepare and interpret consolidated financial statements under the International Financial Reporting Standards (IFRS). We will discuss the basic principles of group accounting and provide in-depth knowledge of the relevant standards. Students get to know the different types of mergers, acquisitions, and investments and the accounting methods needed to inform stakeholders about these activities. Students learn why consolidated financial statements are relevant and how the consolidation process works. In addition, we cover various recent topics in group accounting, e.g., the treatment of goodwill and why regulating it is becoming increasingly difficult. Outline <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Economic principles of group accounting</li><li>• Scope of consolidation</li><li>• Preliminary measures</li><li>• Capital consolidation</li><li>• Debt consolidation</li><li>• Consolidation of revenues and expenses</li><li>• At-equity consolidation</li></ul> |                   |                                      |                 |

| Transparent reporting of large corporations and multinational enterprises are challenging for modern accounting systems. This module addresses recent developments in financial and non-financial accounting, ensuring that students are up-to-date with the current accounting landscape. It is designed for students who have a basic understanding of financial or non-financial accounting and seek to explore complex accounting issues in greater depth. Topics can vary depending on the current issues in practice or research. Former topics include accounting for financial instruments, revenue recognition, or the latest developments in sustainability reporting. The module is taught through a combination of lectures, exercises, and practical case studies. Guest lectures from industry experts are incorporated to provide real-world insights into advanced accounting practices. |                   |                                      |                  |

| The module focuses on financial and management accounting, their functions, possible configurations as well as their impact on internal and external recipients under consideration of the institutional setting. In this context, an economic perspective has priority over detailed legal arrangements and regulations by the standard setters. Based on the theoretical foundations of information economics as well as decision-making and balance sheet theories, questions regarding cost accounting, management control systems, behavioral control and decision-making functions of accounting, quality of financial reporting, and publicity are discussed. |                   |                                      |

| Initially, students acquire a fundamental knowledge of the conception and impact of management and financial accounting as information systems, as well as the economic impacts of the configuration of management and financial accounting. They understand analytical and empirical models from relevant research literature and can interpret and explain the results. Upon completion of the course, the students are able to assess and evaluate the impacts of changes in institutional general frameworks such as changes in valuation standards, publicity rules or regulations about the distribution of profits in enterprises and on capital markets.     |                   |                                      |

| As businesses expand, the complexity of managing and reporting financial information across multiple subsidiaries and countries increases dramatically. Group accounting is crucial for companies operating on a large scale, as it involves consolidating diverse financial data into a single, cohesive set of financial statements that reflect the financial status of the entire corporation. This module covers the necessary knowledge to prepare and interpret consolidated financial statements under the International Financial Reporting Standards (IFRS). We will discuss the basic principles of group accounting and provide in-depth knowledge of the relevant standards. Students get to know the different types of mergers, acquisitions, and investments and the accounting methods needed to inform stakeholders about these activities. Students learn why consolidated financial statements are relevant and how the consolidation process works. In addition, we cover various recent topics in group accounting, e.g., the treatment of goodwill and why regulating it is becoming increasingly difficult. Outline <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Economic principles of group accounting</li><li>• Scope of consolidation</li><li>• Preliminary measures</li><li>• Capital consolidation</li><li>• Debt consolidation</li><li>• Consolidation of revenues and expenses</li><li>• At-equity consolidation</li></ul> |                   |                                      |                 |

| In today's rapidly changing economic landscape, the ability to effectively analyze financial information is more critical than ever. Financial analysis is essential for interpreting past and current financial data to make predictions about future performance and guide strategic decisions that affect the overall business. This module offers students the tools and methodologies needed to evaluate the financial position of companies, assess investment opportunities, and make informed financial decisions. We provide a basic understanding of financial statement analysis, particularly on how to extract value-relevant information from financial statements, carry out financial statement analysis, and use financial data to value corporations. Outline <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Introduction to financial analysis</li><li>• Analysis of earnings information</li><li>• Analysis of balance sheet information</li><li>• Analysis of cash flows</li><li>• Analysis of selected balance sheet positions</li></ul> |                   |                                      |                 |

| Transparent reporting of large corporations and multinational enterprises are challenging for modern accounting systems. This module addresses recent developments in financial and non-financial accounting, ensuring that students are up-to-date with the current accounting landscape. It is designed for students who have a basic understanding of financial or non-financial accounting and seek to explore complex accounting issues in greater depth. Topics can vary depending on the current issues in practice or research. Former topics include accounting for financial instruments, revenue recognition, or the latest developments in sustainability reporting. The module is taught through a combination of lectures, exercises, and practical case studies. Guest lectures from industry experts are incorporated to provide real-world insights into advanced accounting practices. |                   |                                      |                  |

| The module focuses on financial and management accounting, their functions, possible configurations as well as their impact on internal and external recipients under consideration of the institutional setting. In this context, an economic perspective has priority over detailed legal arrangements and regulations by the standard setters. Based on the theoretical foundations of information economics as well as decision-making and balance sheet theories, questions regarding cost accounting, management control systems, behavioral control and decision-making functions of accounting, quality of financial reporting, and publicity are discussed. |                   |                                      |

| Initially, students acquire a fundamental knowledge of the conception and impact of management and financial accounting as information systems, as well as the economic impacts of the configuration of management and financial accounting. They understand analytical and empirical models from relevant research literature and can interpret and explain the results. Upon completion of the course, the students are able to assess and evaluate the impacts of changes in institutional general frameworks such as changes in valuation standards, publicity rules or regulations about the distribution of profits in enterprises and on capital markets.     |                   |                                      |

| This course deals with tax effects on fundamental economic decisions. Taxes are integrated into standard models for investment decisions, financing decisions, firm valuation, dividend policy and remuneration of employees. Therefore, the interaction of corporate and personal income taxes is analysed. Part I <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. Introduction</li> <li>2. | This module focuses on accounting-based instruments to control behavior in decentralized enterprises. The course first discusses the role of accounting in the context of decision-making and behavioral controlling as well as informational analyses. Afterwards, the most common instruments of behavioral controlling (budgeting, value-oriented management, transfer prices) are discussed with regard to theory and practice. |                   |                                      |

| Initially, students acquire an understanding of the necessity of behavioral control in enterprises. Upon completion of the course, they are able to analyze and evaluate requirements and effects of instruments used for behavioral control. Additionally, they develop competences for deployment, structure and development of coordination tools.                                                                               |                   |                                      |

| Research and research skills are foundational to driving business success in a world where information is abundant and constantly evolving. They provide businesses and professionals with the tools needed to navigate complexity, innovate effectively, and compete on a global scale. In today's data-driven landscape, businesses rely on thorough research to make informed decisions. Research skills enable professionals to gather, analyze, and interpret data effectively, ensuring that decisions are based on solid evidence rather than intuition. Moreover, the modern business environment is characterized by rapid change. Continuous learning, facilitated by strong research skills, helps individuals and organizations remain adaptable. These skills enable professionals to keep up with industry developments, technological advancements, and shifts in consumer behavior, ensuring that they are always equipped to respond to new challenges and opportunities. This module is designed to equip students with the skills necessary to conduct rigorous empirical research. Outline <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Introduction to current research</li><li>• How to develop a research question</li><li>• How to conduct research</li><li>• Introduction to various data sources</li><li>• Introduction to applied research methods</li><li>• Visualizing research findings</li></ul> |                   |                                                                                                                     |                 |

| The module offers a comprehensive insight into the world of Enterprise Resource Planning (ERP) systems. ERP systems are central building blocks in modern business management and play a crucial role in the integration of business processes, data management and decision-making. This module is divided into three sections, each of which focuses on practical applications and examples in addition to theory. <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Section 1: ERP selection process with application examples of two ERP systems: The first part of the module is dedicated to the complex process of selecting a suitable ERP system for a company. Students are familiarized with proven methods and tools that are used in the evaluation of ERP systems. Using case studies, students compare two different ERP systems and apply the selection process in a real-life environment.</li><li>• Section 2: Low-code and no-code systems with application examples: In this part, students are familiarized with low-code and no-code platforms that enable the efficient development of individual ERP applications. The focus is on dealing with a specific software solution from a leading company in this field. Students learn the basics of these platforms and create their own applications in order to experience the advantages of low-code and no-code approaches in practice.</li><li>• Section 3: Customizing ERP software using the example of SAP S/4HANA: In the final part, students learn the basics of customizing ERP software. The focus is on the world's leading ERP system SAP S/4HANA. Students are enabled to adapt SAP S/4HANA to the specific requirements of a company. Practical exercises and case studies enable students to apply customizing techniques in real-life scenarios.</li></ul> In addition to the theoretical information presented in the lecture, the exercises offer the opportunity to access the ERP systems and deal with the respective software in a practical way by means of extensive case studies. |                   |                                                                                                                     |                  |

| The "Business Software 1: Management and Implementation of Information Systems" module aims to achieve the following learning outcomes: <ol style="list-style-type: none"><li>1. ERP Systems - Overview and Differentiation: Students gain a comprehensive understanding of various ERP systems, their architectures, and philosophies.</li><li>2. Integration of Business Processes: Participants learn how ERP systems map and optimize business operations.</li><li>3. Selection and Customizing of ERP Systems: Students develop skills to evaluate, select, and adapt ERP systems to meet business needs.</li><li>4. Implementation of Business Processes: Students gain practical experience in independently implementing business processes in ERP and low-code/no-code platforms, and learn practical ERP customizing.</li></ol>                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |                   |                                                                                                                     |                  |

| The module "Business Software 2: Data-driven Business Process Management and Automation" aims to achieve the following learning outcomes: <ol style="list-style-type: none"><li>1. Understanding of Business Process Management: Upon completion of the course, students will be able to articulate the fundamental theories and practical methodologies of Business Process Management. This includes the ability to analyze, redesign, and implement improved business processes both manually and using automated tools.</li><li>2. Application of Modern Data Management Techniques: Students will acquire competencies in modern data management practices that are essential for real-time decision-making in business contexts.</li><li>3. Conducting Process Mining: Students will develop skills in process mining, enabling them to extract data from event logs and analyze this information to uncover inefficiencies and opportunities within business processes. They will learn to apply process mining tools and techniques to real datasets, interpret results, and propose actionable improvements.</li><li>4. Implementation of Process Automation Solutions: The course equips students with the knowledge and skills to automate business processes using industry-standard automation software such as UiPath. Students will learn to identify suitable processes for automation, design automation workflows, and implement these systems to enhance operational efficiency.</li><li>5. Engagement in Scientific Research and Practical Application: Students will expand their academic and practical understanding by engaging with fundamental research papers in the field of Business Process Management. They will also gain practical experience through case studies and hands-on projects, allowing them to effectively apply theoretical knowledge to solve real-world problems.</li><li>6. Development of Professional Competencies: Throughout the course, students will develop a range of professional skills, including critical thinking, problem-solving, teamwork, and effective communication. These competencies are crucial for successful career development in Business Process Management and related fields.</li></ol> |                   |                                      |                  |

| The students possess practically relevant knowledge about the topics of production management and/or professional project management. They are familiar with the critical success criteria and are able to initiate, define, plan, control and review projects.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |                   |                                                        |

| This module is aimed at students of Wirtschaftsinformatik (Business Information Systems) and Wirtschaftswissenschaft (Business Management and Economics) who are interested in enterprise thinking, scaling, and software entrepreneurship. Therefore, this module focuses on the intersection of entrepreneurship, software ecosystems, and scale-up companies. The module first provides a foundation for understanding entrepreneurship from a theoretical perspective. It covers value management, business model development, and organizational structures. This is followed by a deeper insight into the various aspects of practical business management, including daily doing, sales, financing, traction, KPIs measuring success and performance, and legal forms. The main part of this module discusses how software-based companies can position themselves in the market and generate value through different business models and innovative strategies. Students will learn about the ecosystems of digital companies and the composition of their strategies. These strategies form the foundation for the growth of young companies, especially scale-ups. The module provides theoretical overviews, practical tools, and instruments for developing growth strategies. Various financing and exit strategies are also covered. This module includes the following course contents, as summarized below: <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Introduction to Entrepreneurship, Digital Startup Ecosystems, and Process Models</li><li>• Value Management and Business Model Development</li><li>• Daily Doing, KPI, Traction and Project-Management</li><li>• Software Entrepreneurship: Software-based Value Chain</li><li>• Scale-Ups: Introduction, Growth, Tools and Strategies</li><li>• Exit Strategies</li></ul> |                   |                                                                                                                     |                  |

Allocation of places

50 places (max. 10 places will be allocated to students of the supplementary course ZENTRIA)

WA:

Should the number of applications exceed the number of available places, places will be allocated as follows:

(1) Students who already have successfully completed courses offered by the supervising chair will be given preferential consideration.

a. Among applicants with the same number of successfully completed modules, places will be allocated according to the total number of ECTS credits achieved in the corresponding modules.

b. When places are allocated in accordance with b) and the number of applications exceeds the number of available places, places will be allocated according to the average grade of assessments taken in the corresponding courses.

c. Among applicants with the same average grade, places will be allocated by lot.

(2) Any remaining places are available to students who have not yet successfully completed any courses of the supervising chair. The selection is made according to study progress (number of semesters); among applicants with the same number of semesters, places will be allocated by lot. A waiting list will be maintained and places re-allocated as they become available.

| The course discusses advanced approaches for modelling and solving decision problems in business settings. The acquired insights are used to design and implement decision support systems using standard software tools (Python).                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |                   |                                      |

| This course offers an introduction to the fundamentals of causal inference and to widely used research designs in the social sciences. In the first part a framework for understanding causality is introduced. Specifically, the epistemological differences between association, intervention and counterfactuals are explained. Then it is shown why experiments are paramount in generating causal knowledge and which assumptions are needed for which level of the causal hierarchy. Finally, we will discuss two widely used approaches to causality in the social sciences, i.e. potential outcomes and directed acyclic graphs. The second part is devoted to the research designs regressions analysis, difference-in-differences, instrumental variables, and regression discontinuity. The emphasis is how these research designs are for example applied to answer important questions in labour economics such as the effects of a minimum wage increase on employment or the effect of children on female labour supply and wages. The assumptions each research design requires in order to identify a causal effect will be at center stage of the lecture. Therefore the emphasis is to teach students what one needs to estimate in order to answer a given question. Further, the research designs are discussed such that students will be able to evaluate and apply these research designs to other questions and fields. |                   |                                      |                  |

| At the end of the course, students should be able to understand basic concepts and methods of causal inference, as well as read, interpret, and assess the credibility of scientific publications. In addition, the course serves as preparation for advanced statistics and econometrics courses.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |                   |                                      |                  |

| In this course, you will learn the fundamentals for developing, deploying and maintaining machine learning systems in companies (MLOps). This includes an understanding of the associated IT infrastructure as well as staffing and organizational forms for managing machine learning and data science teams. You will refine and test your skills by practicing the theoretical concepts during exercise sessions. This includes a team project, where you and your peers will develop and deploy your own machine learning system. |                   |                                      |

| Production plans, railway timetables, the assignment of radio frequencies, planning of delivery tours, or the construction of an 'optimal' university timetable: these problems – and many more – can be modeled as (mixed-) integer linear optimization problems and solved with integer programming methods. This course teaches integer programming methods like branch-and-bound, cutting plane, and decomposition methods. Furthermore, we practice our modeling skills by studying a variety of application examples. |                   |                                      |

| In this course, students work on advanced data science projects. The course covers the entire data science workflow from data collection to data preparation to modeling, evaluation and deployment. By following a top-down teaching approach, students are enabled to apply complex machine learning models from the beginning.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |                   |                                      |

| As part of the course work, students will acquire knowledge and skills in the following areas: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. Becoming familiar with the principles and frameworks in the research area of Data Science.</li> <li>2. Apply machine learning and deep learning frameworks to structured and unstructured data</li> <li>3. Design, implementation and evaluation of key algorithms within an end-to-end workflow in the field of Data Science</li> <li>4. Application of Jupyter notebooks and their infrastructure (collection, storage, retrieval, and analysis of data)</li> <li>5. Understanding of a data-driven &amp; analytical approach to decision problems</li> </ol>                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |                   |                                      |

| This course aims to equip students with key empirical research methods and their applications in business and economics. The course will cover the development of empirical research ideas, research designs, data generation, data editing, and data analysis. The course will use a paper-based approach to introduce and apply these topics. Additionally, students will learn about existing panel datasets and be led to perform their own empirical research. Students that attend this course should have advanced knowledge in statistics and econometrics. |                   |                                      |

| Data science is concerned with extracting knowledge and valuable insights from data assets. This course provides an introduction to data science and its application in business and economics. Participants will be familiarized with data handling in Python, data visualization, and various machine learning techniques for prediction and estimation. We will apply the acquired knowledge in topics from business and economics. The course will be divided into two parts: the lecture where the techniques will be taught as well as exercise in which students will be able to work with data on their own. |                   |                                      |

| The course Organizational Economics and Digital Transformation introduces advanced topics in organizational economics, with a focus on economic decision-making within organizations. Concepts and tools from microeconomic theory, as well as empirical findings from field studies and laboratory experiments, are incorporated, such as those related to performance measurement and incentives, organizational structure, and authority. Additionally, the course integrates key aspects of digital transformation shaping modern business landscapes. Thus, students not only gain a solid overview of the fundamental principles of organizational economics but also insights into the challenges, opportunities, and strategies associated with the digital transformation of businesses. |                   |                                      |

| Aim and outline of the course: The Nobel Prizes for Daniel Kahneman and Vernon Smith 2002 and for Richard Thaler 2017 have underlined the increasing importance of experimental methods in economics. Experimental methods are used to collect data using randomization or a highly controlled environment. This course offers an introduction to the methodology of experimental economics and economic laboratory experiments. In the methodology part it is shown why experiments are a good tool to generate scientific knowledge. Furthermore, widely used techniques in economic experiments are explained and how economic experiments differ from experiments in other social sciences. This part also deals with methods of reasoning, i.e. how inferences can be drawn from evidence that is generated by experiments. The unifying theme of all laboratory experiments that will be covered is, understanding the behavior of agents, who produce and/or distribute goods by interacting with each other. The first topic is about markets and it includes experiments that shown under which conditions and institutions markets work very efficient and under which conditions and institutions they fail to yield a desirable outcome. The second topic includes experiments that look at the behavior of two agents, who bargain about the distribution of a common pie. On the basis of these results we will discuss experiments that try to explain bargaining behavior and show how agents deviate systematically from the neoclassical framework, i.e. the "homo oeconomicus". The third topic deals with cooperation and institutions that support cooperation in the long run as equilibrium. Further, systematic evidence will be presented on how individuals can be classified in different cooperative types and how these types can explain economic outcomes in natural environments. The forth topic concerns reciprocity, a strong determining factor of human behavior that is nearly universal. We will cover experiments that show how reciprocity can enforce relational contracts in the absence of third party enforcement. Moreover, there will be a special emphasis on how reciprocity affects labor markets. When time permits up to two additional topics will be covered. The first topic is about gender differences in competitiveness, risk-aversion and overconfidence. The second topic is about the elicitation of social norms. Prerequisites: Participants should have a basic knowledge about microeconomics, game theory and econometrics. Literature: The course will be mainly paper based but the following books provide a good overview and complement the discussed papers. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Dharni, S. | The aim of the course is to familiarize students with the methodology experimental economics. Further, students will be enabled to understand how causal evidence can be obtained using controlled variation and how to generalize from results that are derived in artificial laboratory setting to more natural environments. | The module provides an overview of strategic implications of digital technologies at the level of organisations, industries and value networks. To this end, concepts and frameworks from strategic technology management are applied to digital innovations and illustrated with numerous examples. In the accompanying exercise, case studies of well-known digital companies and their business models are analysed and discussed.                                                                                                      |                   |                                      |

| The module provides an overview of technologies and business applications of mobile networks, end devices, applications (including mobile commerce and payment) through to smart objects in a future "Internet of Things". Basic concepts and their use in practice are illustrated using numerous examples. In the accompanying exercise, corresponding case study texts are analyzed and discussed.                                                                                                                                      |                   |                                      |                  |

| This module is aimed at students of Wirtschaftsinformatik (Business Information Systems) and Wirtschaftswissenschaft (Business Management and Economics) who are interested in enterprise thinking, scaling, and software entrepreneurship. Therefore, this module focuses on the intersection of entrepreneurship, software ecosystems, and scale-up companies. The module first provides a foundation for understanding entrepreneurship from a theoretical perspective. It covers value management, business model development, and organizational structures. This is followed by a deeper insight into the various aspects of practical business management, including daily doing, sales, financing, traction, KPIs measuring success and performance, and legal forms. The main part of this module discusses how software-based companies can position themselves in the market and generate value through different business models and innovative strategies. Students will learn about the ecosystems of digital companies and the composition of their strategies. These strategies form the foundation for the growth of young companies, especially scale-ups. The module provides theoretical overviews, practical tools, and instruments for developing growth strategies. Various financing and exit strategies are also covered. This module includes the following course contents, as summarized below: <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Introduction to Entrepreneurship, Digital Startup Ecosystems, and Process Models</li><li>• Value Management and Business Model Development</li><li>• Daily Doing, KPI, Traction and Project-Management</li><li>• Software Entrepreneurship: Software-based Value Chain</li><li>• Scale-Ups: Introduction, Growth, Tools and Strategies</li><li>• Exit Strategies</li></ul> |                   |                                                                                                                     |                  |

Allocation of places

50 places (max. 10 places will be allocated to students of the supplementary course ZENTRIA)

WA:

Should the number of applications exceed the number of available places, places will be allocated as follows:

(1) Students who already have successfully completed courses offered by the supervising chair will be given preferential consideration.

a. Among applicants with the same number of successfully completed modules, places will be allocated according to the total number of ECTS credits achieved in the corresponding modules.

b. When places are allocated in accordance with b) and the number of applications exceeds the number of available places, places will be allocated according to the average grade of assessments taken in the corresponding courses.

c. Among applicants with the same average grade, places will be allocated by lot.

(2) Any remaining places are available to students who have not yet successfully completed any courses of the supervising chair. The selection is made according to study progress (number of semesters); among applicants with the same number of semesters, places will be allocated by lot. A waiting list will be maintained and places re-allocated as they become available.

| This module focuses on the relationship of offer characteristics with benefit aspects for the end consumer and the business models on the part of the providers. Starting from the basics of editorial work and professional text management, the new forms of communication management in social networks are presented. The focus of the lecture is on the use of social media in campaigns (Facebook, Twitter, Instagram, Tiktok). There will also be exercises on various Web 2.0 applications (e.g. online social networks) and on the collection and interpretation of online market research data. Crisis communication of companies will also be covered – in particular opinion-makers on the web as well as protest culture on the web.                                    |                   |                                      |

| By participating in the module courses, students acquire job-specific skills in research and interviewing. Students are able to collect and organize information according to criteria of topicality and relevance. In addition, students are taught journalistic expertise so that they are able to recognize the forms of presentation of news, reports, and background reports with their media characteristics and communicative functions in different media genres and create them themselves. Students will be able to prototype and design a social media campaign, describe the editorial and technical approach including feedback, response, and customer engagement. In addition, students will be able to design counter-strategies for corporate communication crises. |                   |                                      |

| The module focuses on accounting instruments, which are applied in the context of strategic management of enterprises. First, it addresses important drivers of strategic decisions from a microeconomic perspective, such as the emergence of cost and quality advantages in competition as well as scale and experience curve effects. Second, the module covers analytical and heuristic techniques of planning and control. In the context of these techniques, instruments of target costing, life cycle cost analysis, benchmarking and business wargaming are discussed with regard to their theoretical foundation and fields of application. |                   |                                      |

| Initially, students acquire an understanding of economic drivers of strategic decisions as well as fundamental requirements concerning instruments of decision-making and behavior control in enterprises. Upon completion of the course, they are able to analyze and evaluate the strengths and weaknesses, as well as fields of application and limitations, of prevalent instruments of strategic corporate management used in practice. Additionally, they develop competences in the design and further development of strategic instruments.                                                                                                   |                   |                                      |

| In this course, you will learn the fundamentals for developing, deploying and maintaining machine learning systems in companies (MLOps). This includes an understanding of the associated IT infrastructure as well as staffing and organizational forms for managing machine learning and data science teams. You will refine and test your skills by practicing the theoretical concepts during exercise sessions. This includes a team project, where you and your peers will develop and deploy your own machine learning system. |                   |                                      |

| In this course, students work on advanced data science projects. The course covers the entire data science workflow from data collection to data preparation to modeling, evaluation and deployment. By following a top-down teaching approach, students are enabled to apply complex machine learning models from the beginning.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |                   |                                      |

| The lecture provides knowledge about current methods and algorithms in the field of computer vision. Important basics as well as the most recent approaches to image representation, image processing and image analysis are taught. Topics include data representation, image acquisition, restoration and enhancement, features, object modeling, image and video understanding, deep learning and generative methods and applications. Actual models and methods of machine learning as well as their technical backgrounds are presented and their respective applications in Computer Vision are shown. |                   |                                      |

| The students possess a theoretical and practical knowledge of typical methods and algorithms in the area of data mining and machine learning. They are able to solve practical knowledge discovery problems with the help of the knowledge acquired in this course and by using the KDD process. They have acquired experience in the use or implementation of data mining algorithms.                                 |                   |                                      |

| Marketing analytics involves the collection, management, and analysis of data to gain insights into the performance of marketing activities. In fact, it is increasingly possible to use data analysis to inform, make, and even automate marketing decisions. The goal of this course is to provide students with a hands-on understanding of key methods and specific techniques used in marketing analytics. This requires substantive knowledge in marketing as well as of fundamental ideas at the intersection of statistics, economics, psychology, and computer science. The course will cover fundamentals of data science, including data wrangling and data exploration, and will then turn to applied, real-world marketing analytics problems such as marketing mix modeling, market segmentation, and measuring preferences and demand. Emphasis will be placed on data visualization and valuable methods for causal inference in marketing. The course will also delve into a few advanced marketing topics. To provide a hands-on learning experience, the course will include practical applications of the covered content using the R programming language. |                   |                                      |                 |

| This course aims to equip students with key empirical research methods and their applications in business and economics. The course will cover the development of empirical research ideas, research designs, data generation, data editing, and data analysis. The course will use a paper-based approach to introduce and apply these topics. Additionally, students will learn about existing panel datasets and be led to perform their own empirical research. Students that attend this course should have advanced knowledge in statistics and econometrics. |                   |                                      |

| By the end of the course, students will have a comprehensive understanding of how to conduct empirical research in business and economics.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |                   |                                      |

| Networks matter! This holds for technical infrastructures like communication or transportation networks, for information systems and social media in the World Wide Web, but also for various social, economic and biological systems. What can we learn from data that capture the interaction topology of such complex systems? What is the role of individual nodes and how can we discover significant patterns in the structure of networks? How do these structures influence dynamical process like diffusion or the spreading of epidemics? Which are the most influential actors in a social network? And how can we analyze time series data on systems with dynamic network topologies? Addressing those questions, the course combines a series of lectures -- which introduce fundamental concepts for the statistical modelling of complex networks -- with weekly exercises that show how we can apply them to practical network analysis tasks. Topics covered include foundations of graph theory, centrality and modularity measures, aggregate statistical characteristics of large networks, random graphs and statistical ensembles of complex networks, generating function analysis of expected graph properties, scale-free networks, stochastic dynamics in networks, spectral analysis, as well as the modelling of time-varying networks. The course material consists of annotated slides for lectures as well as a accompanying git-Repository of jupyter notebooks, which implement and validate the theoretical concepts covered in the lectures. Students can test and deepen their knowledge through weekly exercise sheets. The successful completion of the course requires to pass a final written exam. |                   |                                                                                                                     |                  |

| The course will equip participants with statistical network analysis techniques that are needed for the data-driven modelling of complex technical, social, and biological systems. Students will understand how we can quantitatively model the topology of networked systems and how we can detect and characterize topological patterns. Participants will learn how to use analytical methods to make statements about the expected properties of very large networks that are generated based on different stochastic models. They further gain an analytical understanding of how the structure of networks shapes dynamical processes, how statistical fluctuations in degree distributions influence the robustness of systems, and how emergent network features emerge from simple random processes.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |                   |                                                                                                                     |                  |

| Languages of the world: language families, typology, etymology. Linguistic universals: words, morphology, parts-of-speech, syntax. Alphabets (scripts), encoding, and language identification. Multilingual word representation spaces (aka cross-lingual word embeddings). Transformer architecture and Pretrained (multilingual) Language Models. Machine translation. Multilingual resources: unlabeled corpora, lexico-semantic networks and word translations, parallel corpora. Cross-lingual transfer: from word alignment and label projection, over MT-based transfer to zero-shot and few-shot transfer with multilingual Transformer-based language models. Advanced topics: curse of multilinguality, modularization and language adaptation, multilingual sentence encoders, contextual parameter generation, multi-source transfer, gradient manipulations. |                   |                                      |

| Students will acquire theoretical and practical knowledge on modern multilingual natural language processing and also get an insight into cutting edge research in (multilingual) NLP. They will learn how to represent texts from different languages in shared representation spaces that enable semantic comparison and cross-lingual transfer for various NLP tasks. Upon successful completion of the course, the students will be well-equipped to solve practical NLP problems regardless of the language of the text data, and to determine the optimal strategy to obtain best performance for any concrete target language.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |                   |                                      |

| Foundations in the following areas: definition of NLP and text mining, properties of text, sentence boundary detection, tokenisation, collocation, N-gram models, morphology, hidden Markov models for tagging, probabilistic parsing, word sense disambiguation, term extraction methods, information extraction, sentiment analysis. The students possess theoretical and practical knowledge about typical methods and algorithms in the area of text mining and language processing mostly for English. They are able to solve problems through the methods taught. They have gained experience in the application of text mining algorithms. |                   |                                      |

| This course offers an introduction to the fundamentals of causal inference and to widely used research designs in the social sciences. In the first part a framework for understanding causality is introduced. Specifically, the epistemological differences between association, intervention and counterfactuals are explained. Then it is shown why experiments are paramount in generating causal knowledge and which assumptions are needed for which level of the causal hierarchy. Finally, we will discuss two widely used approaches to causality in the social sciences, i.e. potential outcomes and directed acyclic graphs. The second part is devoted to the research designs regressions analysis, difference-in-differences, instrumental variables, and regression discontinuity. The emphasis is how these research designs are for example applied to answer important questions in labour economics such as the effects of a minimum wage increase on employment or the effect of children on female labour supply and wages. The assumptions each research design requires in order to identify a causal effect will be at center stage of the lecture. Therefore the emphasis is to teach students what one needs to estimate in order to answer a given question. Further, the research designs are discussed such that students will be able to evaluate and apply these research designs to other questions and fields. |                   |                                      |                  |

| At the end of the course, students should be able to understand basic concepts and methods of causal inference, as well as read, interpret, and assess the credibility of scientific publications. In addition, the course serves as preparation for advanced statistics and econometrics courses.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |                   |                                      |                  |

| The course discusses advanced approaches for modelling and solving decision problems in business settings. The acquired insights are used to design and implement decision support systems using standard software tools (Python).                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |                   |                                      |

| This course aims to equip students with key empirical research methods and their applications in business and economics. The course will cover the development of empirical research ideas, research designs, data generation, data editing, and data analysis. The course will use a paper-based approach to introduce and apply these topics. Additionally, students will learn about existing panel datasets and be led to perform their own empirical research. Students that attend this course should have advanced knowledge in statistics and econometrics. |                   |                                      |

| The course Organizational Economics and Digital Transformation introduces advanced topics in organizational economics, with a focus on economic decision-making within organizations. Concepts and tools from microeconomic theory, as well as empirical findings from field studies and laboratory experiments, are incorporated, such as those related to performance measurement and incentives, organizational structure, and authority. Additionally, the course integrates key aspects of digital transformation shaping modern business landscapes. Thus, students not only gain a solid overview of the fundamental principles of organizational economics but also insights into the challenges, opportunities, and strategies associated with the digital transformation of businesses. |                   |                                      |

| Data science is concerned with extracting knowledge and valuable insights from data assets. This course provides an introduction to data science and its application in business and economics. Participants will be familiarized with data handling in Python, data visualization, and various machine learning techniques for prediction and estimation. We will apply the acquired knowledge in topics from business and economics. The course will be divided into two parts: the lecture where the techniques will be taught as well as exercise in which students will be able to work with data on their own. |                   |                                      |

| Description: This module deals with the basic concept and methodology of the ordinary least squares (OLS) regression model. In particular, model assumptions and properties are discussed and formally motivated. In addition, the module examines linear restrictions on the model's explanatory variables as well as dummy variables and introduces tests to verify simple and multiple linear restrictions. Linear algebra is used as formal aid. Outline of syllabus: <ol style="list-style-type: none"><li>1. | The students acquire knowledge of the basics, concepts and methods used in the classical linear regression model and understand the role of econometrics in science and data analysis. In particular, they learn how to analytically derive, calculate and interpret the coefficients, standard errors and p-values of a classic regression output of the multiple regression model. Furthermore, they are able to formally state and motivate the assumptions and properties of OLS and know how to deal with transformed and dummy variables. Additionally, students will be able to test multiple linear restrictions on the parameters and will be able to apply these tests to real economic, business and social science questions. The competences acquired in this course serve as a prerequisite for "Econometrics II", "Econometrics III", "Microeconometrics" und "Financial Econometrics".       |                   |                                      |                  |

| Marketing analytics involves the collection, management, and analysis of data to gain insights into the performance of marketing activities. In fact, it is increasingly possible to use data analysis to inform, make, and even automate marketing decisions. The goal of this course is to provide students with a hands-on understanding of key methods and specific techniques used in marketing analytics. This requires substantive knowledge in marketing as well as of fundamental ideas at the intersection of statistics, economics, psychology, and computer science. The course will cover fundamentals of data science, including data wrangling and data exploration, and will then turn to applied, real-world marketing analytics problems such as marketing mix modeling, market segmentation, and measuring preferences and demand. Emphasis will be placed on data visualization and valuable methods for causal inference in marketing. The course will also delve into a few advanced marketing topics. To provide a hands-on learning experience, the course will include practical applications of the covered content using the R programming language. |                   |                                      |

| Aim and outline of the course: The Nobel Prizes for Daniel Kahneman and Vernon Smith 2002 and for Richard Thaler 2017 have underlined the increasing importance of experimental methods in economics. Experimental methods are used to collect data using randomization or a highly controlled environment. This course offers an introduction to the methodology of experimental economics and economic laboratory experiments. In the methodology part it is shown why experiments are a good tool to generate scientific knowledge. Furthermore, widely used techniques in economic experiments are explained and how economic experiments differ from experiments in other social sciences. This part also deals with methods of reasoning, i.e. how inferences can be drawn from evidence that is generated by experiments. The unifying theme of all laboratory experiments that will be covered is, understanding the behavior of agents, who produce and/or distribute goods by interacting with each other. The first topic is about markets and it includes experiments that shown under which conditions and institutions markets work very efficient and under which conditions and institutions they fail to yield a desirable outcome. The second topic includes experiments that look at the behavior of two agents, who bargain about the distribution of a common pie. On the basis of these results we will discuss experiments that try to explain bargaining behavior and show how agents deviate systematically from the neoclassical framework, i.e. the "homo oeconomicus". The third topic deals with cooperation and institutions that support cooperation in the long run as equilibrium. Further, systematic evidence will be presented on how individuals can be classified in different cooperative types and how these types can explain economic outcomes in natural environments. The forth topic concerns reciprocity, a strong determining factor of human behavior that is nearly universal. We will cover experiments that show how reciprocity can enforce relational contracts in the absence of third party enforcement. Moreover, there will be a special emphasis on how reciprocity affects labor markets. When time permits up to two additional topics will be covered. The first topic is about gender differences in competitiveness, risk-aversion and overconfidence. The second topic is about the elicitation of social norms. Prerequisites: Participants should have a basic knowledge about microeconomics, game theory and econometrics. Literature: The course will be mainly paper based but the following books provide a good overview and complement the discussed papers. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Dharni, S.
