Learning Outcomes

German contents and learning outcome available but not translated yet.

Wissenschaftliche Befähigung

- Vertiefung der Sprachkompetenzen in der modernen chinesischen Sprache und Schrift im Bereich der Fachsprache.
- Befähigung volkswirtschaftliche und betriebswirtschaftliche Probleme unter Anwendung üblicher Methoden zu analysieren, zu erklären und zu behandeln.
- Befähigung, wirtschaftliche Entwicklungen in China auf der Basis von breitem und integriertem Wissen zum chinesischen Wirtschaftssystem zu interpretieren und zu bewerten.
- Befähigung zur geeigneten mündlichen Präsentation von Problemstellungen und Forschungsergebnissen.
- Befähigung zur fachgerechten Erstellung schriftlicher Arbeiten in englischer Sprache.

Befähigung zur Aufnahme einer Erwerbstätigkeit

- Absolventen/innen verfügen über Problemlösungskompetenz und können mit ihren Kenntnissen und Methoden auch neu auftretende Wirtschaftsfragen analysieren und bearbeiten und ggfs. analoge Fragestellungen für andere Entwicklungs- und Schwellenländer entwickeln.
- Sprach- und Landeskenntnisse des Ziellandes; Absolventen/innen sind in der Lage, Probleme und deren Lösungen zielgruppengerecht und auch in den eingeübten Fremdsprachen aufzubereiten und darzustellen.
- Teamfähigkeit, Konfliktlösungskompetenz: Absolventen/innen sind in der Lage, konstruktiv und zielorientiert in einem heterogenen Team zusammenzuarbeiten, unterschiedliche Ansichten produktiv für die Zielerreichung zu nutzen und mögliche Konflikte zu lösen.
- Befähigung, praxisnahe Lösungen für unternehmerische Probleme im Kontext der wirtschaftlichen Zusammenarbeit mit China zu entwickeln und zu erklären.

Persönlichkeitsentwicklung

- Die Absolventen/innen können ihre erworbenen Kompetenzen in unterschiedlichen interkulturellen Kontexten, insbesondere im chinesischen Kulturkreis anwenden.
- Die Absolventen/innen können sich sicher in einem heterogenen Umfeld bewegen und andere Meinungen konstruktiv für ein gemeinsames Ziel einbinden. Sie sind kritikfähig.
- Die Absolventen/innen sind befähigt, Aufgaben zu gestellten Themen methodisch und fristgerecht zu bearbeiten und sich in neue Arbeitsgebiete selbständig und kritisch einzuarbeiten, was ein lebenslanges Lernen befördert.

Befähigung zum gesellschaftlichen Engagement

- Die Absolventen/innen können kulturelle und gesellschaftliche Entwicklungen vergleichen, kritisch reflektieren und begründet eigene Positionen beziehen. Sie haben die Fähigkeit entwickelt, ihre Kompetenzen in partizipativen Prozessen einzubringen.

| China's economic development has been extraordinary over the past decades. The module explores how history, political system, factor endowment and economic policies have contributed to China's development in the past and characterize the economic situation today. It explains how, for example, macroeconomic theory, political economic theory and new institutional economics identify different drivers of and explanations for China's economic development. The module further addresses specific characteristics and problems of the Chinese business landscape and financial sector. |                   |                                                    |

| Students get acquainted with different methods and approaches to explain China's past economic success and current economic situation. Against this background they learn to develop an analytical approach and to structure and write an academic paper on a related topic of interest.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |                   |                                                    |

| China's size, development trajectory, economic system and business models raise a number of questions with regard to standard economic theory. Therefore this module discusses how China's economy can be grasped with social science and economic research methodologies. At the same time it explores examples how China's case informs and influences economic theory. |                   |                                                    |

| Over the past decades Chinese have emerged as important players in the global economy and the Chinese government as an important power in global economic governance. This module offers an introduction into China's international economic relations both from an economic and a political perspective. It specifically addresses strategies of Chinese firms for global markets and explores whether and how these differ compared to suggestions in standard international business and economics literature |                   |                                                    |

| Students learn to assess the importance of China's economy in the global context and to evaluate China's international economic strategies. They can apply international business and economics concepts to the Chinese context and adapt them to the situation of Chinese firms. The module enables them to analyze emerging issues in international trade and investment from both the Chinese and an international perspective.                                                                               |                   |                                                    |

| The lecture Organisation covers the basic methodological, empirical, and institutional concepts of management that are necessary for the further study of the subject. More specifically, it gives answers to the question why there are organisations. In addition, different goals, strategies, and structures of enterprises as well as their economic and societal environment are discussed. Finally, selected empirical findings from organisation research are presented together with the basic tool kit for empirical methods and approaches. |                   |                                      |

| This course provides a comprehensive overview of the theoretical and practical aspects of information systems. The content ranges from the history of information systems and business software to business models, technical requirements and process modelling. In addition to the lectures, tutorials with practical exercises in HTML, CSS, process mining and BPMN support a deeper understanding and application of the knowledge learnt. Outline of syllabus: <ol style="list-style-type: none"><li>1. overview and technological basics of WI</li><li>2. hardware, computer networks and the internet</li><li>3. databases and blockchain</li><li>4. business models, company structure and organisation</li><li>5. connection between business administration and information systems</li><li>6. business software and process mining</li><li>7. software development</li><li>8. future technologies and current research</li></ol> Reading: Thome: Grundzüge der Wirtschaftsinformatik.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |                   |                                                                                                                     |                     |

| The "Business Informatics" module aims to achieve the following learning outcomes: <ol style="list-style-type: none"><li>1. Apply fundamentals: after completing the module, students will have an understanding of the basic concepts and terms of information systems and will be able to explain lecture elements addressed, such as hardware components, various database types or blockchain technology. Thanks to the practical exercises, they are able to implement simple applications and apply what they have learnt in practice. The students were also able to gain an overview of the various fields of business informatics.</li><li>2. Analysing business processes and system landscapes: After completing the module, students will be able to analyse business models and process modelling and demonstrate their skills by creating BPMN diagrams in practical exercises. They know the basics of software development and are familiar with ERP systems.</li><li>3. Conception of business solutions: Students are able to use learned knowledge about business software, structural and process organisation and new technologies to develop realistic solution strategies and business models for operational challenges. They have knowledge of the integration of information systems into operational processes.</li><li>4. Evaluating technology trends: Participants will be able to critically evaluate current and future trends in business informatics, including artificial intelligence and Industry 4.0, and contribute their assessments to discussions.</li></ol> |                   |                                                                                                                     |                     |

| Based on an intermediate level of modern Chinese required for admission to China Business and Economics, students will receive language training aiming at an advanced level of applied Chinese business language. This entails harmonizing international students' Chinese language level in the first term. Students are systematically introduced to economic vocabulary in Chinese language by using texts on economic models in Chinese language, as well as material on applied business language. Practical application of usage of economic language is trained in case studies such as stock market games etc. Furthermore, students give presentations on various business strategies and topics such as marketing, value chain, logistics, competitive advantage etc. |                   |                                                    |

| Students have good command of economic vocabulary and can produce clear and detailed oral or written presentations on economic issues giving the advantages and disadvantages of various points of views. They are able to read, understand, and analyze Chinese texts and materials on various economic issues. They are able to give a presentation based on theoretical models in Chinese language.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |                   |                                                    |

| One of the many challenges that foreign businesses face with regard to the Chinese market is to understand the specific challenges that arise from doing business in or cooperating with China and to translate theoretical knowledge into practical strategies and business cases. Therefore, in this module students built upon theoretical and empirical research done by others to jointly develop a project in which they can apply their insight to a specific case. The case topic changes from year to year and is defined after consultation with the students. |                   |                                                    |                 |

| Students understand the differences between markets and business environments. They apply this understanding to a practical case that they collectively analyze within a realistic project. The students learn project management tools to manage the project work themselves with only supportive guidance by the lecturer. Thereby student experience the hurdles of group work and project work. They learn to organize a project within a specific timeframe and to solve related conflicts.                                                                         |                   |                                                    |                 |

| Doing business in China is different from doing business in other markets, and Chinese competitors often differ in their business strategies from other countries' companies. Therefore, foreign firms expanding to China have to adapt their marketing strategies to Chinese customers and consumers, while Chinese firms expanding globally pose a challenge their foreign competitors while they also have to adapt. Based on academic literature and business examples, the module introduces students to the peculiarities of consumerism and marketing in China as well as business strategies of Chinese firms in global markets. |                   |                                                    |

| Students learn to consider distinct aspects of consumerism and markets in China and their relevance for marketing strategies of foreign firms operating in China. In addition, they understand how the social, political and economic characteristics of the Chinese market influences internationalization strategies of Chinese firms. By combining the outside-in and the inside-out perspective the develop a deep understanding how differences between societies and markets matter for global business.                                                                                                                           |                   |                                                    |

| China's economic rise increases the pressure on local and global public goods and changes the setting of global competition. This module interprets these issues as challenges to sustainable development. It addresses the (lack of) environmental and social sustainability of China's growth, as well as countermeasures taken by the Chinese government. In addition, it explores the economic sustainability of China's rise as a question of innovativeness and therefore compares China's national innovation system with those of other economies. |                   |                                                    |

| Students can evaluate economic policies from the perspective of their environmental, social and economic sustainability and assess the external effects of economic policies and development. Through intensive discussions and policy round table simulations they experience the dilemma arising from conflicting policy and business targets. At the same time they identify Chinese company and government strategies to overcome the dilemma.                                                                                                         |                   |                                                    |

| Since the late 1970s the on-going process of reform and opening up has brought about great changes for China's economy and society. More than four decades later the pace of development remains high and the People's Republic of China continues to swiftly catch up to the developed industrial nations. This module discusses recent developments and trends that shape China's economy and society today and in the foreseeable future, i.e. the globalization of Chinese companies and brands, questions of innovativeness, digitization and e-commerce, or structural changes. |                   |                                                    |                 |

| Students discuss and evaluate economic and societal developments, based on a selection of primary and secondary sources, against the background of different economic theories. The module enables them to analyze recent developments and identify emerging and future issues in China's rapidly changing economic landscape.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |                   |                                                    |                 |

| China exhibits a novel mix of economic dynamism, social modernization and the political structures of an authoritarian political system run by a Communist Party. This unique and at the same time highly dynamic scenario calls for a multi-disciplinary approach to disentangle the various interconnected developments. This introduction provides an overview of relevant research on contemporary China, focusing on either China's politics, society or political economy, depending on the learning agreement with the new student group. |                   |                                                    |                     |

| Students gain in-depth understanding of the field of Contemporary Chinese Studies, familiarize themselves with relevant theoretical and methodological approaches and train their analytical capacities. Classroom discussions of relevant research literature enhance the students' oral presentation abilities.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |                   |                                                    |                     |

| This module offers an introduction to some core institutions, practices, concepts and values of the state, society and culture of late imperial China, mainly during the 16th to 18th centuries (mid Ming to mid Qing). It includes both continuous as well as innovative or discontinuous elements, and identifies important fields of tension in the political, social and cultural systems. In order to provide a general focus, a thematic frame of choice is offered, such as local history, gender history, or the history of everyday life, depending on the learning agreement with the new student group. Each topic is viewed through a primary source, besides suitable research literature, with the source text presented in both the original language as well as an English translation. Thus, the course also offers an introduction to a range of source types and genres, and to reading and analyzing them. This course offer is also open to students in the CLE/CBE programs. |                   |                                                    |

| Students are familiarized with a range of institutions, issues, concepts and developments of the late-imperial Chinese state, society and culture. They strengthen their abilities to view a problem from various perspectives. They also learn to handle primary sources, approaching them methodically, based on appropriate source critique. Students practice the effective oral presentation of their insights from working on one topic and source, and its written summary in a handout.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |                   |                                                    |

| The far-reaching developments in the economic and societal spheres have left their marks on the party-state. They brought about complex processes of change and adaptation in the ways political power is constituted and employed. This opened up the question of limits to this adaptability and the ultimate direction it will take. Classes offered in this module pursue these questions in the form of an overview of different aspects of China's domestic politics (such as grassroots politics, elite politics or political culture) or foreign relations.          |                   |                                                    |

| Students familiarize themselves with current political trends and developments in China. This is achieved on the basis of critical reading of primary and secondary academic sources on Chinese politics in Chinese and English. Students systematically train the critical assessment and evaluation of research findings, relevant theories and empirical methodologies in this field. Classroom discussions of texts impart debate skills while the written term paper allows for students to exercise writing an academic exposition based on properly selected sources. |                   |                                                    |

| Building on the earlier class on contemporary Chinese politics, this module provides a detailed analysis of political trends in Chinese domestic politics. Starting at an advanced level the course will focus on either of the following aspects of Chinese domestic politics: Grassroots Politics (rural and urban governance reforms, protests and contentious politics, NGOs and social activism); Elite Politics (factions and personalities, politics of succession, decision-making structures and processes, elite formation in the wider polity); Political Culture (mass political culture and dominant intellectual trends, political values and attitudes, variants of Chinese nationalism). |                   |                                                    |

| Students receive a systematic introduction to research on Chinese politics, learn about relevant theoretical and methodological approaches and the necessary sources. They are acquainted with the current scholarly debates in the field and cutting-edge research. This will prepare them for the writing of their Master's theses.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |                   |                                                    |

| Chinese society is currently undergoing social transformations so rapid and far-reaching that they have few historical precedents. This is the cumulative result of three interrelated processes: modernization, globalization, and transition to a post-socialist society. Consequences of these transformations are at once to be observed on the surface, such as growing social stratification and inequality, as well as hidden below, e.g. value-change and the search for new social identities. Classes offered in this sub-module analyze these issues in the form of an overview of different aspects of China's society (such as modernization and social change, social differentiation and inequality, shifting social identities). |                   |                                                    |

| Students familiarize themselves with current social trends and developments in China. This is achieved on the basis of critical reading of primary and secondary academic sources on Chinese society in Chinese and English. Students systematically train the critical assessment and evaluation of research findings, relevant theories and empirical methodologies in this field. Classroom discussions of texts impart debate skills while the written term paper allows for students to exercise writing an academic exposition based on properly selected sources.                                                                                                                                                                         |                   |                                                    |

| Students receive a systematic introduction to research on China's society, learn about relevant theoretical and methodological approaches and the necessary sources. They are acquainted with the current scholarly debates in the field and cutting-edge research. This will prepare them for the writing of their Master's theses.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |                   |                                                    |                      |

| China's gradualist economic reforms led to an incremental "growing out of the plan" and transition towards the ideal of a "socialist market economy." However, parts of the state-owned industries and crucial state-economy linkages were maintained. At the same time, new forms of regulating and steering the economy had to be devised by the government to adapt to the increasingly marketized environment. These new institutions of an emerging "regulatory state" are, however, not the result of a well-coordinated and rationally planned reform strategy. On the contrary, they are an outgrowth of intensely contentious political and social processes. Classes offered in this sub-module address China's changing political economy in the form of an overview of different aspects of China's political economy in transformation (such as rural political economy, urban economic reforms. Financial sector development, economic policies and regulation). |                   |                                                    |

| Students familiarize themselves with current trends and developments in China's political economy. This is achieved on the basis of critical reading of primary and secondary academic sources on Chinese politics in Chinese and English. Students systematically train the critical assessment and evaluation of research findings, relevant theories and empirical methodologies in this field. Classroom discussions of texts impart debate skills while the written term paper allows for students to exercise writing an academic exposition based on properly selected sources.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |                   |                                                    |

| Students receive a systematic introduction to research on China's political economy, learn about relevant theoretical and methodological approaches and the necessary sources. They are acquainted with the current scholarly debates in the field and cutting-edge research. This will prepare them for the writing of their Master's theses.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |                   |                                                    |                      |

| Societal modernisms can be found in various aspects of the transformational Chinese society. Visual arts play a specific role in the interaction with other fields of modern Chinese society and culture reflecting political and economic developments in a highly complex way. At the same time Chinese visual arts have interacted with western discourses in art and developed an own language and an own market. The analysis of the discourses in painting, sculpture, conceptual and media art in the period from 1989 to the present is done by visual material, comments of the artists and academic texts. |                   |                                                    |

| Students are familiarized with relevant discourses and developments in modern Chinese art. They are introduced to methodological approaches to discourses in modern Chinese culture. They are able to analyze new developments based on an interaction of visual material and written commentaries or academic discussions.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |                   |                                                    |

| Students understand interactions in recent developments of visual arts. They gain the ability to an in depth comparative analysis of specific developments from context driven as well as external cultural and scientific discourses and independently apply various methodological approaches.                                                                                                                   |                   |                                                    |

| China's society has been undergoing far-reaching transformation since the founding of the PRC, a process that has been dramatically accelerated since the beginning of the reform period. Since the early 2010s more Chinese live in cities than in the countryside, marking an important turning point in history. The process of modernization and the transition towards a post-socialist society is characterized by gradual reforms but also persistence of socialist institutions, most visible in the long-standing urban-rural dichotomy. Institutional barriers and involvement of the party-state continue to influence the process of urbanization and modernization to a great extend, and therefore also the overall makeup of society. |                   |                                                    |                      |

| Students are systematically introduced to different aspects of the process of urbanization and modernization in China, which will allow them to better assess overall societal development in the PRC. In-depth knowledge will be gained by reading primary and secondary academic sources in English and Chinese. In-class discussion shall advance understanding and help to foster debate skills.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |                   |                                                    |                      |

| Building on basic knowledge on Transformation in Urban and Rural China this module will take an in-depth look at urban-rural issues that have arisen due to the process of rapid modernization and urbanization since the late 1970s. The class will focus on different aspects, e.g. rural issues (Three Rural Issues, Building a New Socialist Countryside), rural-to-urban transition (shifting identities, in situ urbanization, rural urbanization), or questions of land and property (pro-growth coalitions, urbanization of the soil, urban transitional spaces, land use rights). |                   |                                                    |

| Students gain in-depth knowledge of different aspects related to on-going process of urbanization and modernization in contemporary China. They will familiarize themselves with specific issues and related methodological approaches as well as the current state of academic research, thereby training their analytical capacities and preparing them to conduct their own research in this field.                                                                                                                                                                                     |                   |                                                    |

| Chinese literary history, as written in the modern period, emphasizes the genres of narrative and drama, which in premodern times only had subcultural status, but are now considered masterworks of China's literary heritage. The outstanding literary works of Ming and Qing narrative and drama, besides offering profound insights into the historical, social and cultural milieus they represent, also provide access to pertinent contexts, such as the history of the book, of reading, editing and commenting. In terms of genre evolution they are studied as encompassing aspects of both persistent cultural continuity and striking innovation, also mirroring developments in society and culture at large. The courses offered in this module focus on individual literary masterworks exemplifying relevant genres, themes, and periods. Suggested genres (and titles) include the novel (Shuihu zhuan), the vernacular story (San yan), the classical tale (Liaozhai zhiyi), and the song drama (Xixiang ji). The choice of focus depends on the learning agreement with the new student group. While the literary work in question is read and discussed in class only in short, exemplary excerpts, its more comprehensive reading (in either translation or the original text) is required as accompanying homework. The program for the course focuses on a selection of philological and analytical issues. It also provides the basis for individual oral presentations and a starting point for term papers. |                   |                                                    |

| Students are familiarized with one outstanding work of premodern Chinese literature, and with a range of contexts and analytical issues relevant for its interpretation and research. They are acquainted with elements of literary analysis and with appropriate, up-to-date methodological approaches. They further develop their skills in academic reading and oral presenting.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |                   |                                                    |

| Chinese literary history, as written in the modern period, emphasizes the genres of narrative and drama, which in premodern times only had subcultural status, but are now considered masterworks of China's literary heritage. The outstanding literary works of Ming and Qing narrative and drama, besides offering profound insights into the historical, social and cultural milieus they represent, also provide access to pertinent contexts, such as the history of the book, of reading, editing and commenting. In terms of genre evolution they are studied as encompassing aspects of both persistent cultural continuity and striking innovation, also mirroring developments in society and culture at large. The courses offered in this module focus on individual literary masterworks exemplifying relevant genres, themes, and periods. Suggested genres (and titles) include the novel (Shuihu zhuan), the vernacular story (San yan), the classical tale (Liaozhai zhiyi), and the song drama (Xixiang ji). The choice of focus depends on the learning agreement with the new student group. While the literary work in question is read and discussed in class only in short, exemplary excerpts, its more comprehensive reading (in either translation or the original text) is required as accompanying homework. The program for the course focuses on a selection of philological and analytical issues. It also provides the basis for individual oral presentations and a starting point for term papers. |                   |                                                    |

| Students are familiarized with one outstanding work of premodern Chinese literature, and with a range of contexts and analytical issues relevant for its interpretation and research. They are acquainted with elements of literary analysis and with appropriate, up-to-date methodological approaches. They further develop their skills in academic reading and oral presenting.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |                   |                                                    |

| The society and culture of late imperial China may be analyzed as a complex system of institutions, practices, and values. During the 16th through 18th centuries (mid Ming to mid Qing), this system increasingly became subject to the dynamics of social mobility and the expansion of commerce. Despite a generally strong sense of continuity, the effects and tensions of crises were perceived in all fields of cultural and social life. Courses offered in this module pursue these questions by focusing on one particular field of cultural and social history. Suggested topics and contents include the following: education, literacy and publishing; city and village; or elite and popular culture. The choice of focus depends on the learning agreement with the new student group. The thematic program guides the students toward the exploration of suitable primary source materials and to a range of relevant research literature. It provides the basis for oral presentations and a starting point for individual term papers. |                   |                                                    |

| Students are familiarized with one major field of late-imperial Chinese cultural and social history, and with a selection of issues and contexts relevant for its research. They are acquainted with important topics of cultural-historical analysis and with a range of appropriate, up-to-date methodological approaches. They further develop their skills in academic reading and oral presenting.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |                   |                                                    |

| The society and culture of late imperial China may be analyzed as a complex system of institutions, practices, and values. During the 16th through 18th centuries (mid Ming to mid Qing), this system increasingly became subject to the dynamics of social mobility and the expansion of commerce. Despite a generally strong sense of continuity, the effects and tensions of crises were perceived in all fields of cultural and social life. Courses offered in this module pursue these questions by focusing on one particular field of cultural and social history. Suggested topics and contents include the following: education, literacy and publishing; city and village; or elite and popular culture. The choice of focus depends on the learning agreement with the new student group. The thematic program guides the students toward the exploration of suitable primary source materials and to a range of relevant research literature. It provides the basis for oral presentations and a starting point for individual term papers. |                   |                                                    |

| Students are familiarized with social history, and with a selection of issues and contexts relevant for its research. They are acquainted with important topics of cultural-historical analysis and with a range of appropriate, up-to-date methodological approaches. They further develop their skills in academic reading and oral presenting.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |                   |                                                    |

| Important social and cultural developments and institutions, such as the civil examination system, basically began in the Song dynasty (960-1279) and appear to have continued to persist over much of the second millennium CE, until the end of the Qing dynasty (1644-1911). However, within this overall image of continuity and stability we find extensive histories of reform and change, aiming at the correction of perceived deficiencies or the adaptation to new challenges and developments. This module provides the framework for courses that emphasize the longue durée in China's cultural history, from the Song to the Qing, looking at the cultural histories of social groups and institutions, identifying major periods of crisis, and testing common patterns of periodization. Combining the survey of long-term developments with snapshots in time and case studies, it introduces a selection of source materials and an appropriate range of research literature. |                   |                                                    |                     |

| This module develops students' insights into long-term changes and developments in China's social and cultural history, as they learn to consider both continuity and change. They acquire deepened skills in handling source materials from a wide historical range.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |                   |                                                    |                     |

| Important social and cultural developments and institutions, such as the civil examination system, basically began in the Song dynasty (960-1279) and appear to have continued to persist over much of the second millennium CE, until the end of the Qing dynasty (1644-1911). However, within this overall image of continuity and stability we find extensive histories of reform and change, aiming at the correction of perceived deficiencies or the adaptation to new challenges and developments. This module provides the framework for courses that emphasize the longue durée in China's cultural history, from the Song to the Qing, looking at the cultural histories of social groups and institutions, identifying major periods of crisis, and testing common patterns of periodization. Combining the survey of long-term developments with snapshots in time and case studies, it introduces a selection of source materials and an appropriate range of research literature. |                   |                                                    |                     |

| This module develops students' insights into long-term changes and developments in China's social and cultural history, as they learn to consider both continuity and change. They acquire deepened skills in handling source materials from a wide historical range.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |                   |                                                    |                     |

| The historical period of the late Tang to the Ming dynasty sees the development of a new Confucian learning in Chinese society. The broader embedment into discourses of political and societal developments, the examination system and the relevance for everyday life will be given. The elaboration of a systematical philosophic terminology and the range of controversial debates among different schools of Confucianism in the period is to be understood. |                   |                                                    |

| Students are familiarized with the historical context and terminological system of Confucianism from late Tang to late Ming. They are apt to independently analyze original texts within the framework of Confucianism in the given period, societal context and scientific discourse.                                                                                                                                                                              |                   |                                                    |

| This class focusses on interactions and connections between China, Korea and Japan. These may be direct and obvious interactions such as trade (including smuggling, piracy), warfare, and diplomatic relations, or religious, philosophical, and institutional ideas and phenomena usually taken over from China in a variant more adequate for the smaller countries. Cultural phenomena discussed include (women's) literature, music, and especially painting. East Asian History I covers the time until about 1600, East Asian History II deals with the period from 1600 to 1800 (Tokugawa-shogunate in Japan, Qing-dynasty in China, Western ideas introduced by early Christian mission). |                   |                                                    |

| Students of Chinese Studies will widen their horizon and learn about different ways of implementing Chinese concepts in different settings. They will develop a deep understanding for societal conditions enabling or hindering close contacts and interactions between states and individuals.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |                   |                                                    |

| Description In this module, students will acquire the theoretical foundations of market-oriented management. Content: With the stakeholder approach as a starting point, the basic design of market-oriented management will be explained and exemplified in the 5 classical steps: situation analysis, objectives, strategies, tools and controlling. The course will focus not only on the behavioural approaches of consumer behaviour but also on industrial purchasing behaviour. A case study introducing students to the fundamental principles of market research based on a conjoint analysis will provide students with deeper insights into the topic. Outline of syllabus: <ol style="list-style-type: none"><li>1. | Students are systematically trained in microeconomic methods relevant in household and firm theory. Accordingly, they will know how to solve optimization problems under constraints. These scientific methods will serve as useful in many fields of specialization in economics and business administration. In particular, students know analytically how to analyze the impact of changes in the economic environment, e.g., wages, interest rates, income on individual decision making.                                                                                    |                   |                                      |

| Description: This module covers basic macroeconomic relationships, the declaration of employment, production, interest, current and capital account, nominal and real exchange rate, prices and inflation - in the long run (with flexible wages and prices) and in the short term (with fixed wages and prices). The course will familiarise students with concepts which are of central importance in a globalised environment (e. g. interest rate arbitrage, foreign exchange risk, purchasing power parity). The explanations will be applied to current issues (e. g. current account balances in the global economy; questions related to the European monetary union and the global financial crisis). Outline of syllabus: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Macroeconomic issues and characteristics <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Issues of macroeconomics</li> <li>The measurement of economic activity</li> </ul> </li> <li>Long-term relationships <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>The classic long-term model of the closed economy</li> <li>Money and Inflation</li> <li>The classic long-term model of a small open economy</li> <li>Unemployment</li> </ul> </li> <li>Short and medium-term relationships <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Fluctuations of economic activity: an introduction</li> <li>The IS-LM model of a closed economy</li> <li>The IS-LM model of an open economy</li> <li>Aggregate supply and Phillips curve</li> <li>Conclusion and outlook</li> </ul> </li> </ol> Reading: The latest editions of the following textbooks: N. | This expertise enables the students to penetrate economically-intuitively and analytically macroeconomic interactions and problems in the course of advancing globalization and to deal with these arguments. Students learn to interpret on a scientific basis the impact of macroeconomic developments in individual economic actors (businesses, households, the state).                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |                   |                                      |

| This course provides students with a comprehensive understanding of the principles and processes of conducting effective marketing research. This includes, for example, understanding latent constructs, designing data collection methods and questionnaires, and setting up experiments. In addition, students will learn techniques for data analysis and interpretation using SPSS, covering univariate, bivariate and multivariate analysis methods to derive actionable insights from the research results. Rough course structure: <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Basics and process of marketing research</li><li>• Introduction to marketing research</li><li>• Latent constructs</li><li>• Data collection &amp; questionnaire design</li><li>• Experimental set-up</li></ul> Data analysis and interpretation <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Introduction to SPSS</li><li>• Univariate and bivariate analysis methods</li><li>• Multivariate analysis methods (various forms of regression analysis; analysis of variance; conjoint analysis; mediation analysis; structural equation modeling)</li></ul> |                   |                                      |                 |

| Through theoretical considerations as well as practical exercises and case studies, students develop the necessary skills to collect and analyze data in order to make strategic marketing decisions.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |                   |                                      |                 |

| The module focuses on accounting instruments, which are applied in the context of strategic management of enterprises. First, it addresses important drivers of strategic decisions from a microeconomic perspective, such as the emergence of cost and quality advantages in competition as well as scale and experience curve effects. Second, the module covers analytical and heuristic techniques of planning and control. In the context of these techniques, instruments of target costing, life cycle cost analysis, benchmarking and business wargaming are discussed with regard to their theoretical foundation and fields of application. |                   |                                      |

| Initially, students acquire an understanding of economic drivers of strategic decisions as well as fundamental requirements concerning instruments of decision-making and behavior control in enterprises. Upon completion of the course, they are able to analyze and evaluate the strengths and weaknesses, as well as fields of application and limitations, of prevalent instruments of strategic corporate management used in practice. Additionally, they develop competences in the design and further development of strategic instruments.                                                                                                   |                   |                                      |

| This module focuses on accounting-based instruments to control behavior in decentralized enterprises. The course first discusses the role of accounting in the context of decision-making and behavioral controlling as well as informational analyses. Afterwards, the most common instruments of behavioral controlling (budgeting, value-oriented management, transfer prices) are discussed with regard to theory and practice. |                   |                                      |

| Initially, students acquire an understanding of the necessity of behavioral control in enterprises. Upon completion of the course, they are able to analyze and evaluate requirements and effects of instruments used for behavioral control. Additionally, they develop competences for deployment, structure and development of coordination tools.                                                                               |                   |                                      |

| The module offers a comprehensive insight into the world of Enterprise Resource Planning (ERP) systems. ERP systems are central building blocks in modern business management and play a crucial role in the integration of business processes, data management and decision-making. This module is divided into three sections, each of which focuses on practical applications and examples in addition to theory. <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Section 1: ERP selection process with application examples of two ERP systems: The first part of the module is dedicated to the complex process of selecting a suitable ERP system for a company. Students are familiarized with proven methods and tools that are used in the evaluation of ERP systems. Using case studies, students compare two different ERP systems and apply the selection process in a real-life environment.</li><li>• Section 2: Low-code and no-code systems with application examples: In this part, students are familiarized with low-code and no-code platforms that enable the efficient development of individual ERP applications. The focus is on dealing with a specific software solution from a leading company in this field. Students learn the basics of these platforms and create their own applications in order to experience the advantages of low-code and no-code approaches in practice.</li><li>• Section 3: Customizing ERP software using the example of SAP S/4HANA: In the final part, students learn the basics of customizing ERP software. The focus is on the world's leading ERP system SAP S/4HANA. Students are enabled to adapt SAP S/4HANA to the specific requirements of a company. Practical exercises and case studies enable students to apply customizing techniques in real-life scenarios.</li></ul> In addition to the theoretical information presented in the lecture, the exercises offer the opportunity to access the ERP systems and deal with the respective software in a practical way by means of extensive case studies. |                   |                                                                                                                     |                  |

| The "Business Software 1: Management and Implementation of Information Systems" module aims to achieve the following learning outcomes: <ol style="list-style-type: none"><li>1. ERP Systems - Overview and Differentiation: Students gain a comprehensive understanding of various ERP systems, their architectures, and philosophies.</li><li>2. Integration of Business Processes: Participants learn how ERP systems map and optimize business operations.</li><li>3. Selection and Customizing of ERP Systems: Students develop skills to evaluate, select, and adapt ERP systems to meet business needs.</li><li>4. Implementation of Business Processes: Students gain practical experience in independently implementing business processes in ERP and low-code/no-code platforms, and learn practical ERP customizing.</li></ol>                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |                   |                                                                                                                     |                  |

| The module provides an overview of strategic implications of digital technologies at the level of organisations, industries and value networks. To this end, concepts and frameworks from strategic technology management are applied to digital innovations and illustrated with numerous examples. In the accompanying exercise, case studies of well-known digital companies and their business models are analysed and discussed.                                                                                                      |                   |                                      |

| E-commerce is a highly relevant field for almost all types of companies. However, the ecommerce approaches and strategies applied by companies differ strongly depending on the respective firm context (e.g., in terms of industry, types of customers, types of products). In this seminar, students analyze the specific e-commerce strategy of a selected firm. In doing so, they evaluate the strategies' current and future potential and make suggestions for improvements and for addressing future trends. Furthermore, each lecture session will contain short presentations where the students (in groups) will either apply selected lecture topics to real-world business cases or present the core aspects of research articles dealing with e-commerce topics in general.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |                   |                                                                                                                     |                  |

| Marketing analytics involves the collection, management, and analysis of data to gain insights into the performance of marketing activities. In fact, it is increasingly possible to use data analysis to inform, make, and even automate marketing decisions. The goal of this course is to provide students with a hands-on understanding of key methods and specific techniques used in marketing analytics. This requires substantive knowledge in marketing as well as of fundamental ideas at the intersection of statistics, economics, psychology, and computer science. The course will cover fundamentals of data science, including data wrangling and data exploration, and will then turn to applied, real-world marketing analytics problems such as marketing mix modeling, market segmentation, and measuring preferences and demand. Emphasis will be placed on data visualization and valuable methods for causal inference in marketing. The course will also delve into a few advanced marketing topics. To provide a hands-on learning experience, the course will include practical applications of the covered content using the R programming language. |                   |                                      |

| This module deals with the valuation and use of classical derivatives in financial markets. In particular, futures, swaps and options are considered as well as their possible applications in the context of financial risk management. In particular, students will be introduced to the theory involved in pricing options, as well as important valuation parameters. In addition, some established risk measures such as value-at-risk are discussed. 1. Introduction 2. Futures &amp; Forwards 3. Swaps 4. Options 5. | The module comprises selected topics in corporate finance. On the one hand we cover forward transactions and derivatives, including futures and options, as well as an outlook on other financial instruments such as swaps. The focus is on introduction, trading, valuation, and strategies for managing these instruments. On the other hand, legal foundations of risk management are discussed. Students will gain knowledge about important legal regulations and their significance for compliance in companies, especially in corporate, criminal, securities, anti-trust, and labor law. |                   |                                      |

| Description: The module covers the fundamentals, methods and concepts for the empirical analysis of financial market data. The concept of market efficiency is explained and critically examined with reference to the random walk hypothesis. To test this hypothesis, a number of parametric and non-parametric methods are proposed and applied in practice. Based on the findings, market microstructure models that can explain some important empirical findings will be discussed. In addition, the course describes event studies for testing the significant impact of corporate news on the share price and discusses issues of univariate time series analysis such as AR(I)MA and ARCH / GARCH models that are indispensable for modelling financial market data. In the final part of the course, CAPM is discussed and examined, in particular with regard to its empirical applicability. Syllabus: <ol style="list-style-type: none"><li>1. | Students have significant knowledge of the fundamentals, methods and concepts that are needed for the empirical analysis of financial market data. They can autonomously perform statistical test decisions with statistic programs such as R and critically analyze their economic importance. In addition, the students learn the independent handling of empirical capital market data and at the end of the course, they will have the ability to develop own functions and routines, for example for R.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |                   |                                                                                                                     |                  |

| The module focuses on financial and management accounting, their functions, possible configurations as well as their impact on internal and external recipients under consideration of the institutional setting. In this context, an economic perspective has priority over detailed legal arrangements and regulations by the standard setters. Based on the theoretical foundations of information economics as well as decision-making and balance sheet theories, questions regarding cost accounting, management control systems, behavioral control and decision-making functions of accounting, quality of financial reporting, and publicity are discussed. |                   |                                      |

| Initially, students acquire a fundamental knowledge of the conception and impact of management and financial accounting as information systems, as well as the economic impacts of the configuration of management and financial accounting. They understand analytical and empirical models from relevant research literature and can interpret and explain the results. Upon completion of the course, the students are able to assess and evaluate the impacts of changes in institutional general frameworks such as changes in valuation standards, publicity rules or regulations about the distribution of profits in enterprises and on capital markets.     |                   |                                      |

| In today's rapidly changing economic landscape, the ability to effectively analyze financial information is more critical than ever. Financial analysis is essential for interpreting past and current financial data to make predictions about future performance and guide strategic decisions that affect the overall business. This module offers students the tools and methodologies needed to evaluate the financial position of companies, assess investment opportunities, and make informed financial decisions. We provide a basic understanding of financial statement analysis, particularly on how to extract value-relevant information from financial statements, carry out financial statement analysis, and use financial data to value corporations. Outline <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Introduction to financial analysis</li><li>• Analysis of earnings information</li><li>• Analysis of balance sheet information</li><li>• Analysis of cash flows</li><li>• Analysis of selected balance sheet positions</li></ul> |                   |                                      |                 |

| Students acquire a working knowledge of key incentive models, selected empirical applications and the necessary econometric background. This enables them to identify the advantages and disadvantages of different incentive systems that are applied in the enterprise context, to make informed management analyses and to critically evaluate current controversies and developments as well as to conduct their own research.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |                   |                                      |

| The seminar "Empirische Personalforschung" ("Empirical HR Research with STATA") introduces and discusses the most important estimation problems and their application in the software package STATA. In addition, students learn, with the help of basic problems of personnel economics, how estimation programs are programmed in STATA. Reading list to be provided in class.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |                   |                                      |                  |

| This module focuses on accounting-based instruments to control behavior in decentralized enterprises. The course first discusses the role of accounting in the context of decision-making and behavioral controlling as well as informational analyses. Afterwards, the most common instruments of behavioral controlling (budgeting, value-oriented management, transfer prices) are discussed with regard to theory and practice. |                   |                                      |

| Initially, students acquire an understanding of the necessity of behavioral control in enterprises. Upon completion of the course, they are able to analyze and evaluate requirements and effects of instruments used for behavioral control. Additionally, they develop competences for deployment, structure and development of coordination tools.                                                                               |                   |                                      |

| During the 1960/70s, microeconomic theory came to acknowledge that many (if not most) economic transactions are characterized by asymmetric distribution of information – i.e., at least one of the parties participating in a transaction usually is privy to information that the remaining parties do not have access to. This asymmetric distribution of information subsequently was recognized to be a major impediment for transactions to be economically efficient. Contract theory addresses the question how the inefficiencies arising from asymmetric distribution of information can best be mitigated by appropriate design of the contractual (or, more generally, institutional) framework that governs the transaction under consideration. This lecture covers the baseline models of “moral hazard” (i.e., situations where one party has private knowledge after a contract has been signed) and “adverse selection” (i.e., situations where one party has private knowledge before a contract is signed). As applications we will address questions discussed in organizational, personnel or industrial economics, such as incentive design within organizations or the design of labor law regulations and competition laws. Even though we will work with precise mathematical formalizations of the ideas that we want to think and talk about, this course requires little more than a solid understanding of basic differential calculus. More important than having a solid mathematical background is having a strong interest in formal economic analysis and fun with logical thinking and puzzle solving. The exposition is primarily based on the following textbook: Laffont and Martimort (2002): "The Theory of Incentives" |                   |                                      |

Intended learning outcomes

At the end of this course, students will have the following competences:

Students gain solid basic knowledge of employment and labour law, the works council and its tasks and an overview of collective agreement law. At the same time, methodically and substantively sound legal knowledge is conveyed and practical relevance is established with case studies and current case law.

By working on an exam in the form of a legal opinion, the students are taught to solve a demanding legal issue with legal problems in a given time. Within a narrow thematic field and a time-limited framework, they are able to work on a legal issue in a well-founded and largely independent manner.

Within the framework of the term paper on a judgement of the Federal Labour Court, the students deal with a concrete case and the case law of the highest German labour court. They are familiarised with the methods of legal work and are enabled to work independently in a problem-solving manner. In addition to understanding the facts of the case and the legal problems, they will focus primarily on the consequences of the judgement for their practice. Here, the legal knowledge imparted will be implemented with a practical approach and the opportunity to creatively develop their own recommendations on how to deal with the judgement. In addition, the students present the case and their own conclusions for practice. In the group discussion, the other students have the opportunity to gather further knowledge and actively participate in the exchange of opinions on current judgements and case law.

The knowledge imparted is relevant for a wide range of professional fields of activity and is especially valuable for students who will work in the field of human resources or are interested in the field of employee management.

| The course Organizational Economics and Digital Transformation introduces advanced topics in organizational economics, with a focus on economic decision-making within organizations. Concepts and tools from microeconomic theory, as well as empirical findings from field studies and laboratory experiments, are incorporated, such as those related to performance measurement and incentives, organizational structure, and authority. Additionally, the course integrates key aspects of digital transformation shaping modern business landscapes. Thus, students not only gain a solid overview of the fundamental principles of organizational economics but also insights into the challenges, opportunities, and strategies associated with the digital transformation of businesses. |                   |                                      |

| Aim and outline of the course: The Nobel Prizes for Daniel Kahneman and Vernon Smith 2002 and for Richard Thaler 2017 have underlined the increasing importance of experimental methods in economics. Experimental methods are used to collect data using randomization or a highly controlled environment. This course offers an introduction to the methodology of experimental economics and economic laboratory experiments. In the methodology part it is shown why experiments are a good tool to generate scientific knowledge. Furthermore, widely used techniques in economic experiments are explained and how economic experiments differ from experiments in other social sciences. This part also deals with methods of reasoning, i.e. how inferences can be drawn from evidence that is generated by experiments. The unifying theme of all laboratory experiments that will be covered is, understanding the behavior of agents, who produce and/or distribute goods by interacting with each other. The first topic is about markets and it includes experiments that shown under which conditions and institutions markets work very efficient and under which conditions and institutions they fail to yield a desirable outcome. The second topic includes experiments that look at the behavior of two agents, who bargain about the distribution of a common pie. On the basis of these results we will discuss experiments that try to explain bargaining behavior and show how agents deviate systematically from the neoclassical framework, i.e. the "homo oeconomicus". The third topic deals with cooperation and institutions that support cooperation in the long run as equilibrium. Further, systematic evidence will be presented on how individuals can be classified in different cooperative types and how these types can explain economic outcomes in natural environments. The forth topic concerns reciprocity, a strong determining factor of human behavior that is nearly universal. We will cover experiments that show how reciprocity can enforce relational contracts in the absence of third party enforcement. Moreover, there will be a special emphasis on how reciprocity affects labor markets. When time permits up to two additional topics will be covered. The first topic is about gender differences in competitiveness, risk-aversion and overconfidence. The second topic is about the elicitation of social norms. Prerequisites: Participants should have a basic knowledge about microeconomics, game theory and econometrics. Literature: The course will be mainly paper based but the following books provide a good overview and complement the discussed papers. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Dharni, S. | The aim of the course is to familiarize students with the methodology experimental economics. Further, students will be enabled to understand how causal evidence can be obtained using controlled variation and how to generalize from results that are derived in artificial laboratory setting to more natural environments. | Entrepreneurial behavior can manifest in many forms, including launching a startup (entrepreneurship), instilling entrepreneurship and innovation in existing companies (intrapreneurship), or taking over an existing company (business succession). This module covers tools and concepts critical for entrepreneurial behavior in all three scenarios, such as design thinking, lean startup, and business modelling. |                   |                                      |

| The module provides an overview of strategic implications of digital technologies at the level of organisations, industries and value networks. To this end, concepts and frameworks from strategic technology management are applied to digital innovations and illustrated with numerous examples. In the accompanying exercise, case studies of well-known digital companies and their business models are analysed and discussed.                                                                                                      |                   |                                      |

| The module focuses on the discussion and critical examination of instruments and methods used in the context of project management and control within enterprises. Special attention is being directed towards internal company projects that are associated with significant changes for those involved. Thus, alongside classical and agile project management approaches, theoretical foundations and methods of change management are also considered. The module covers characteristic features and structures of projects, their possible success factors, methods and instruments of control and management of projects in various project phases. The theoretical basis as well as potential applications of these instruments are discussed. |                   |                                      |

| Initially, students acquire an understanding of project management and control tools as well as change management. Upon completion of the course, they are capable of analyzing and evaluating the strengths and weaknesses, as well as the application possibilities and limitations, of commonly used tools and methods in practice. Furthermore, they gain competencies in designing and advancing project management and controlling. Additionally, students are able to apply these tools and methods in practical settings.                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |                   |                                      |

| Students acquire a working knowledge of key incentive models, selected empirical applications and the necessary econometric background. This enables them to identify the advantages and disadvantages of different incentive systems that are applied in the enterprise context, to make informed management analyses and to critically evaluate current controversies and developments as well as to conduct their own research.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |                   |                                                                                                                     |                 |

| E-commerce is a highly relevant field for almost all types of companies. However, the ecommerce approaches and strategies applied by companies differ strongly depending on the respective firm context (e.g., in terms of industry, types of customers, types of products). In this seminar, students analyze the specific e-commerce strategy of a selected firm. In doing so, they evaluate the strategies' current and future potential and make suggestions for improvements and for addressing future trends. Furthermore, each lecture session will contain short presentations where the students (in groups) will either apply selected lecture topics to real-world business cases or present the core aspects of research articles dealing with e-commerce topics in general.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |                   |                                                                                                                     |                  |

| This module focuses on accounting-based instruments to control behavior in decentralized enterprises. The course first discusses the role of accounting in the context of decision-making and behavioral controlling as well as informational analyses. Afterwards, the most common instruments of behavioral controlling (budgeting, value-oriented management, transfer prices) are discussed with regard to theory and practice. |                   |                                      |

| Initially, students acquire an understanding of the necessity of behavioral control in enterprises. Upon completion of the course, they are able to analyze and evaluate requirements and effects of instruments used for behavioral control. Additionally, they develop competences for deployment, structure and development of coordination tools.                                                                               |                   |                                      |

| The module focuses on accounting instruments, which are applied in the context of strategic management of enterprises. First, it addresses important drivers of strategic decisions from a microeconomic perspective, such as the emergence of cost and quality advantages in competition as well as scale and experience curve effects. Second, the module covers analytical and heuristic techniques of planning and control. In the context of these techniques, instruments of target costing, life cycle cost analysis, benchmarking and business wargaming are discussed with regard to their theoretical foundation and fields of application. |                   |                                      |

| Initially, students acquire an understanding of economic drivers of strategic decisions as well as fundamental requirements concerning instruments of decision-making and behavior control in enterprises. Upon completion of the course, they are able to analyze and evaluate the strengths and weaknesses, as well as fields of application and limitations, of prevalent instruments of strategic corporate management used in practice. Additionally, they develop competences in the design and further development of strategic instruments.                                                                                                   |                   |                                      |

| Students acquire a working knowledge of key incentive models, selected empirical applications and the necessary econometric background. This enables them to identify the advantages and disadvantages of different incentive systems that are applied in the enterprise context, to make informed management analyses and to critically evaluate current controversies and developments as well as to conduct their own research.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |                   |                                                                                                                     |                 |

| The module focuses on the discussion and critical examination of instruments and methods used in the context of project management and control within enterprises. Special attention is being directed towards internal company projects that are associated with significant changes for those involved. Thus, alongside classical and agile project management approaches, theoretical foundations and methods of change management are also considered. The module covers characteristic features and structures of projects, their possible success factors, methods and instruments of control and management of projects in various project phases. The theoretical basis as well as potential applications of these instruments are discussed. |                   |                                      |                   |

| Initially, students acquire an understanding of project management and control tools as well as change management. Upon completion of the course, they are capable of analyzing and evaluating the strengths and weaknesses, as well as the application possibilities and limitations, of commonly used tools and methods in practice. Furthermore, they gain competencies in designing and advancing project management and controlling. Additionally, students are able to apply these tools and methods in practical settings.                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |                   |                                      |                   |
