Content and Objectives of the Programme

The Bachelor programme Musicology imparts fundamental scientific knowledge, familiarity with the most important methods in the subject and practice-related skills. Students acquire a competent foundation in the areas of earlier and modern music history, music and media, ethnomusicology, systematic musicology and music theory. They furthermore obtain a wider qualification, in the sense of optional individual emphases, in a selection of areas. Graduates of this course of studies are equipped for a spectrum of activities in the field of media, music publishing and scientifically-based cultural activities. At the same time, the programme provides a qualification for a wide range of Master programmes in music, culture and media.

Contents:
In this module, the sources, musical testimonies and cultural-historical conditions of European music history and their music-historiographical interpretation are studied. The focus is on persons, phenomena and processes of music history. Using significant examples, the basics of specific humanities methods (e.g. philological, descriptive, comparative and analytical methods) and speaking about music (e.g. specialist terminology, use of metaphor) are taught, reflected and practised.

Intended learning outcomes:
The student has exemplary knowledge of European music history, its sources and its phenomena. He/she is able to classify this knowledge into historical contexts. On this basis, the student is able to present and interpret music-historical phenomena appropriately.

Contents

In this module, fundamental academic and practice-oriented concepts of Ethnomusicology are studied. Paths to intercultural understanding and to competence in cultural studies are paved. It will be dealt with examples from the diversity of the world’s musical traditions, methods of field research and documentation and possibilities of analysing everyday musical culture as well as with questions on the anthropology of music in the context of different traditions and world views.

Intended learning outcomes

The student is familiar with exemplary methods of field research, documentation and analysis and the potentials of their application. He/she is able to understand the cultural-academic working methods of Ethnomusicology.

Contents:
In this module, the relationship between music and society is studied from a systematic and historical point of view. Music is regarded as a social phenomenon and analysed in different musical cultures and historical contexts with its specific musical functions and institutions. In addition to general techniques of sociological structural analysis, specific techniques of empirical research will be learnt.

Intended learning outcomes:
The student has the ability to recognise music sociological phenomena and to classify them theoretically. He/she is able to collect data with the help of empirical methods within the framework of a clearly defined task, evaluate and present it in textual or graphic form.

In this module, the media and, if applicable, the inter- or transmedial composition of music are studied by using examples or on the basis of media theories - synchronous, diachronic or media archaeological. Preferably this is a media aesthetic reflection. Furthermore, basic communication systems or (from a sociological perspective) communication patterns can be covered.

Intended learning outcomes

The student has basic knowledge of the medial composition* of music in an exemplary subject area. He/she is able to discuss media theoretical methods or individual strategies in terms of their aims and argumentation and to apply them to examples.

Contents

In this module, the basic compositional principles of European music from the early modern period to the present, as well as its contemporary music theoretical contexts, will be studied. The two courses, which are coordinated in terms of content, focus on models of composition based on the traditional theories of counterpoint, basso continuo and different harmonic concepts. Using significant examples, techniques of historically informed analysis of music will be practised and their possibilities and limitations will be discussed.

Intended learning outcomes

The student has basic knowledge of the history of European music theory, its sources and contexts. He/she is able to use this knowledge in the analysis of music. On this basis, he/she is able to recognise and present compositional-historical contexts.

In this module, the basics of Organology are studied. Subject areas are, for example, organological systematics (comparative if necessary), Organology in cultural, intercultural, sociological, instrument group-specific and/or building history terms, acoustics, and finally instrumentation theory. A documentary or museum pedagogical project can also be offered at the Study Collection Musical Instruments and Media at the Institute for Music Research.

Intended learning outcomes

The student has basic knowledge in the field of Organology. He/she is able to present the acquired knowledge appropriately, for example by designing documentary or museum educational work in outline and carrying it under supervision.

In this module, the regional conditions and characteristics of music from different cultures are studied. Specific regional music traditions are taken into account, for example from the perspective of their stylistic characteristics, their transmission modalities or those characteristics which result from the spatial mobility of musicians. Empirical, source-critical or text-critical methods as well as comparative analyses are applied, for example with regard to regional transfer processes, characteristics of musical forms or regional traditions of music practice.

Intended learning outcomes
The student has an idea of the geographical spectrum and the regionally differentiated diversity of global music cultures. He/she is able to develop processes and phenomena shaped by regional music within the framework of a clearly defined task and to classify them in cultural or intercultural contexts.

Contents

In this module, the sources, musical testimonies and cultural-historical conditions of European music history and their music-historiographical interpretation are studied. The focus is on persons, phenomena and processes of music history. Using significant examples, the basics of specific methods of the Humanities (e.g. philological, descriptive, comparative and analytical working methods) and of speaking about music (such as specialist terminology, use of metaphor) are taught, reflected and practised.

Intended learning outcomes

The student has in-depth knowledge of European music history, its sources and its phenomena. He/she is able to classify this knowledge reflectively into historical contexts. On this basis, he/she is able to present and interpret music-historical phenomena in a methodical and differentiated manner.

Contents

In this module, the similarities and differences between musical cultures in the past and present are studied. The conditions of mutual understanding between the bearers of mutually foreign musical cultures are taken into account. Using exemplary topics from European and non-European music as well as the respective music thinking, the problems, goals and limits of an academically founded understanding of music and the music thinking of foreign cultures are reflected. In this process, students will become acquainted with concepts of culture, interculturality and transculturality and will be able to apply them to musicological questions.

Intended learning outcomes

The student has knowledge of academic concepts of cultures, interculturality and transculturality. He/she is familiar with the conditions, possibilities and limits of an academic sound understanding of the music of foreign cultures. He/she is able to critically apply the acquired knowledge to issues of Musicology.

Contents
In this module, either the psychological or the social basics of music production and music reception are studied. The students are provided with an overview of the systematic discipline areas of music psychology or music sociology with their respective subject-specific questions and methods. They learn how to apply these to current and music historical subjects.

Intended learning outcomes
The student has knowledge of either the subject Music Psychology or the subject Music Sociology with its most important methodological approaches. He/she is able to look at musical phenomena and works of art from a music-psychological or music-sociological perspective and to classify the specific findings into the general understanding of music.

Contents

In this module, either the psychological or the social basics of music production and music reception are studied. The students are provided with an overview of the systematic discipline areas of music psychology or music sociology with their respective subject-specific questions and methods. They learn how to apply these to current and music historical subjects.

Intended learning outcomes

The student has knowledge of either the subject Music Psychology or the subject Music Sociology with its most important methodological approaches. He/she is able to look at musical phenomena and works of art from a music-psychological or music-sociological perspective and to classify the specific findings into the general understanding of music.

Contents

In this module, the specifics of Systematic Musicology are studied. Problems of epistemological such as the relationship between the humanities and the natural sciences and between theory and practice are discussed, and concepts such as system, paradigm and academic object, synchronicity and diachronicity are defined. On this basis, the subject framework of Systematic Musicology with its sub-disciplines of acoustics, music theory, music aesthetics, music psychology, music sociology, music semiotics and musical logic is reflected. Finally, the connection of Musicology to disciplines such as communication theory, media studies or systems theory is shown.

Intended learning outcomes

The student has a deepened competence in the theory of science on the field of Systematic Musicology. He/she is able to develop and differentiate issues from the specialist field and to outline methodically conscious solutions.

In this module, the medial forms of the transmission of music are studied. Oral and written transmission as well as electronic and sound storage with their respective characteristics and problems will be taken into account. The concept and matter of source, writing and text as well as the dimensions of mechanical and electrical production, archiving and reproduction of music are critically reflected.

Intended learning outcomes
The student has knowledge of the different forms of music transmission. When looking at specific sources, he/she is able to recognise the academic issues resulting from them. Against this background, the student is able to methodically and appropriately deal with the specific problems and to determine the relationship of the carrier of the tradition and the object of the tradition.

In this module, a self-written text on a musicological topic is worked on with the support of a supervisor. Under guidance, the candidate chooses a suitable subject. The candidates develop and define the questions and goals of their projects. The candidates write a text that meets academic standards in form and linguistic presentation, taking into account the relevant academic literature and using appropriate methods.

Intended learning outcomes

The candidate has the academic knowledge and methods that enable him/her to work on a defined topic. He/she has the linguistic skills to analyse and present academic and musical contexts. The student is, accompanied by the supervisor, technically and organisationally able to write a musicological study that complies with the rules of good scientific practice.

Contents
In this module, students are provided with the basics of correct and independent work on questions and subject matters of music research. In the two courses, which will be coordinated in terms of content, basic musicological working techniques are taught and practiced, in particular research (databases, bibliographies, subject-specific types of sources), bibliography (primary and secondary sources) and citation. The understanding of the content, structure and meaning of scholarly texts will be developed, tested and reflected. The written and oral presentation of academic results will be theoretically studied and practised in practice.

Intended learning outcomes
The student has knowledge of the subject-specific research tools and methods and the academic formal requirements as the basis of correct academic work. He/she is able to classify, understand and reflect academic texts and to reproduce their essential contents. The student is able to present academic findings according to the rules of good scientific practice in a structured manner and appropriately to the requirements of the content, both orally and in writing.

Contents
In this module, the basic conditions of the relationship between music and text as well as music as text in European music are studied. In the two courses, which are coordinated in terms of content, the focus is first of all on the different strategies of the musicalisation of texts from the Middle Ages to the present day under the provisions of declamation, verse, speech-sound, phrase and syntax as well as the possibilities of text-generated musical semantics. Subsequently, specific musical reading skills will be practised on the basis of exemplary scores and the understanding of different typefaces of written music.

Intended learning outcomes
The student has basic experiences of the relationship between music and language as well as the resulting musical compositions and genres. He/she is able to read scores appropriately and to classify them historically as well as to describe and interpret musical textures.

Module title: Tonality
Abbreviation: 04-MW-SQF1-112-m01

Module coordinator: Akad. Rat/Rätin for Music Theory
Module offered by: Institute for Musical Research

ECTS: 5
Method of grading: Only after successfully completed module(s)
Duration: 2 semester
Module level: undergraduate
Other prerequisites: --

Contents:
In this module, the basics of the fundamental tone-oriented European understanding of music are studied. The two courses, which build on each other, first deal with the elements of tonal music (intervals, scales, chords, clauses) as well as the musical procedures based on them (melody, voice leading, continuo, cadences and sequences). These components and procedures are then studied in exemplary analyses in the context of different compositions. In the process, specific music-theoretical ways of thinking and analytical concepts are taught, reflected and practised.

Intended learning outcomes:
The student has basic knowledge of European music theory as well as basic compositional skills in the areas of counterpoint, basso continuo and harmony. He/she is able to read music of different styles appropriately and to describe it terminologically correctly. The student is able to apply these skills to the analysis of music.
