Contents
In this module, the sources, musical testimonies and cultural-historical conditions of European music history since the early modern period (around 1420) and their music-historiographical interpretation are studied. The six coordinated courses deal with persons, phenomena and processes of music history. Using significant examples, specific methods of the humanities (such as philological, descriptive, comparative and analytical working methods) and of speaking about music (such as technical terminology and use of metaphor) are taught, reflected and practised.
Intended learning outcomes
The student has basic knowledge of European music history since the early modern period, its sources and its phenomena. He/she is able to classify this knowledge into historical contexts. On this basis, the student is able to present and interpret music-historical phenomena appropriately.

Contents
In this module, the basics of the fundamental tone-oriented European understanding of music are studied. The two courses, which build on each other, first deal with the elements of tonal music (intervals, scales, chords, clauses) and the musical procedures based on them (melody, voice leading, basso continuo, cadenzas and sequences). These elements and procedures will then be studied in exemplary analyses in the context of different compositions. Specific music theoretical ways of thinking and concepts of analysis will be provided, reflected and practised.
Intended learning outcomes
The student has basic knowledge of European music theory as well as basic compositional skills in the areas of counterpoint, basso continuo and harmony. He/she is able to read music of different styles appropriately and to describe it terminologically correctly. The student is able to apply these skills to the analysis of music.

In this module, the basics, forms and contents of aesthetic perception are studied. The focus is on the most important music-aesthetic theories of European music history in their respective historical and social context, but also their practical application. Using selected examples from the history of music, aesthetically reflected evaluation of music from different epochs and styles are practised and critically discussed.
Intended learning outcomes
The student has basic knowledge of the history and theory of Music Aesthetics. He/she is able to classify musical works of art from different epochs into the context of the respective aesthetics and at the same time to reflect his/her own aesthetic experience.

This module deals with fundamental questions about musical and musicological practices. On the one hand, the verbalisation of music in everyday language and popular science are addressed; and, on the other hand, the experience of music through active participation in ensembles or practical work on current projects at the Institute for Music Research are reflected against a theoretical background.
Intended learning outcomes
The student has basic experience in reflecting musical practice and has learnt to verbalise these experiences. He/she is able to speak and write about musical matters in a subject-appropriate way. Furthermore, he/she has a fundamentally trained ability to make aesthetic judgements.

In this module, possible professional fields of activity for musicologists are studied. The focus is on networking with cultural and academic institutions as well as on the exchange with representatives of other professionally relevant subjects. Based on ongoing research at the Institute for Music Research or specific cultural events, the student is introduced to the practice of specific academic working methods. By helping to shape cultural and music mediating projects, basic skills in project planning, implementation and evaluation are practised. There is the possibility to involve externally completed work placements.
Intended learning outcomes
The student has gained an insight into possible vocational fields of activity of musicologists as an example. He/she is familiar with the target group-oriented transfer of his/her musicological knowledge in an appropriate form. He/she is able to participate in the planning, realisation and evaluation of music-related projects.

Contents
This module will study the possibilities, methods and cognitive goals of analytical development of composed music. Basic knowledge of music theory will be applied to selected works of textual or instrumental music. Historical composition theory, traditional academic music theory and current music theory discourses will be presented as complementary foundations of musical analysis.
Intended learning outcomes
The student has basic knowledge of several methods of musical analysis and has applied an exemplary selection of these. He/she is able to analyse composed music of the European-Western tradition in an appropriate manner within the framework of a clearly defined task and to present the results.

In this module, the sources, musical testimonies and cultural-historical conditions of European music history from the early modern period (around 1420) and their music-historiographical interpretation are studied. The two coordinated* courses deal with persons, phenomena and processes of music history. Using significant examples, specific methods of the Humanities (such as philological, descriptive, comparative and analytical working methods) and of speaking about music (such as specialist terminology and use of metaphor) are taught, reflected and practised.
Intended learning outcomes
The student has exemplary knowledge of European music history since the early modern period, its sources and phenomena. He/she is able to classify this knowledge into historical contexts. On this basis, the student is able to present and interpret music-historical phenomena appropriately.

Contents
In this module, the sources, musical testimonies and cultural-historical conditions of European music history and their music-historiographical interpretation are studied. The focus is on persons, phenomena and processes of music history. Using significant examples, specific methods of the Humanities (such as philological, descriptive, comparative and analytical methods) and of speaking about music (such as specialist terminology and use of metaphor) are provided, reflected and practised.
Intended learning outcomes
The student has in-depth knowledge of European music history, its sources and its phenomena. He/she is able to classify this knowledge reflectively into historical contexts. On this basis, he/she is able to present and interpret music-historical phenomena in a methodical and differentiated manner.

In this module, the similarities of and differences between musical cultures in the past and present are studied. The conditions of mutual understanding between the bearers of mutually foreign musical cultures are examined. By means of exemplary topics from European and non-European music as well as the respective music thinking, the problems, goals and limits of an academic founded understanding of music and the music thinking of foreign cultures are reflected. In the process, students will become acquainted with concepts of culture, interculturality and transculturality and apply them to musicological questions.
Intended learning outcomes
The student has knowledge of academic concepts of culture, interculturality and transculturality. He/she is familiar with the conditions, possibilities and limits of an academically sound understanding of the music of foreign cultures. The student is able to critically apply the acquired knowledge to issues of Musicology.

In this module, the regional conditions and characteristics of music from different cultures are studied. Specific regional musical traditions are studied, for example from the perspective of their stylistic characteristics, their modes of transmission or those features which result from the spatial mobility of musicians. Empirical, source-critical or text-critical methods as well as comparative analyses are applied, for example with regard to regional transfer processes, characteristics of musical forms or regional traditions of music practice.
Intended learning outcomes
The student has an idea of the geographical spectrum and the regionally differentiated diversity of global music cultures. He/she is able to develop processes and phenomena shaped by regional music within the framework of a clearly defined task and to classify them in cultural or intercultural contexts.

In this module, either the psychological or the social foundations of music production and reception are studied. The students are given an overview of the systematic fields of music psychology or music sociology with their respective subject-specific questions and methods. They learn how to apply these to current and music historical subjects.
Intended learning outcomes
The student has knowledge of either the subject of Music Psychology or the subject of Music Sociology with its most important methodological approaches. He/she is able to look at musical phenomena and works of art from a music-psychological or music-sociological perspective and to classify the specific findings in the general understanding of music.

Contents
In this module, either the psychological or the social foundations of music production and reception are studied. The students are given an overview of the systematic fields of music psychology or music sociology with their respective subject-specific questions and methods. They learn how to apply these to current and music historical subjects.
Intended learning outcomes
The student has knowledge of either the subject of Music Psychology or the subject of Music Sociology with its most important methodological approaches. He/she is able to look at musical phenomena and works of art from a music-psychological or music-sociological perspective and to classify the specific findings in the general understanding of music.

In this module the relationship between music and society is studied from a systematic and historical point of view. Music is regarded as a social phenomenon and analysed in different musical cultures and historical contexts with its specific musical functions and institutions. In addition to general techniques of sociological structural analysis, specific techniques of empirical research will be learnt.
Intended learning outcomes
The student has the ability to independently recognise music sociological phenomena, to classify them theoretically and to formulate corresponding hypotheses. He/she is able to collect data by means of empirical methods, evaluate and present them clearly in textual or graphic form.

In this module, the specifics of Systematic Musicology are studied. Problems of academic theory such as the relationship between the Humanities and the Natural Sciences and between theory and practice are discussed. Furthermore, concepts such as system, paradigm and object of science, synchrony and diachrony are defined. On this basis, the reflection of the disciplinary framework of Systematic Musicology with its sub-disciplines acoustics, music theory, music aesthetics, music psychology, music sociology, music semiotics and musical logic will be carried out. Finally, the connection of Musicology to disciplines such as communication theory, media studies or systems theory will be shown.
Intended learning outcomes
The student has a deepened competence pertaining to the theory of science in the field of Systematic Musicology. He/she is able to develop and differentiate questions from the subject area and to outline methodically conscious solutions.

In this module, the basic compositional principles of European music from the early modern period to the present, as well as its contemporary music theoretical contexts, are studied. The two courses, which will be coordinated in terms of content, focus on models of composition based on the traditional theories of counterpoint, basso continuo and different harmonic concepts. Using significant examples, techniques of historically informed analysis of music will be practised and their possibilities and limitations will be discussed.
Intended learning outcomes
The student has basic knowledge of the history of European music theory, its sources and contexts. He/she is able to use this knowledge in the analysis of music. On this basis, the student is able to recognise and present compositional-historical connections.

In this module, the media forms of the transmission of music are studied. The oral and written transmission as well as the electronic and sound storage with their respective peculiarities and problems are taken into consideration. The concept and purpose of source, writing and text as well as the dimensions of mechanical and electrical production, archiving and reproduction of music will be reflected critically.
Intended learning outcomes
The student has knowledge of the different fomrs of music transmission. When looking at specific sources, he/ she is able to recognise the academic issues resulting from them. Against this background, the student is able to methodically and appropriately deal with the specific problems and to determine the relationship of the carrier of the tradition and the object of the tradition.

In this module, students are provided with the basics of correct and independent work on questions and subject matters of music research. In the two courses, which will be coordinated in terms of content, basic musicological working techniques are taught and practiced, in particular research (databases, bibliographies, subject-specific types of sources), bibliography (primary and secondary sources) and citation. The understanding of the content, structure and meaning of scholarly texts will be developed, tested and reflected. The written and oral presentation of academic results will be theoretically studied and practised in practice.
Intended learning outcomes
The student has knowledge of the subject-specific research tools and methods and the academic formal requirements as the basis of correct academic work. He/she is able to classify, understand and reflect academic texts and to reproduce their essential contents. He/she is able to present academic findings according to the rules of good scientific practice in a structured manner and appropriately to the requirements of the content, both orally and in writing.

In this module, the basic conditions of the relationship between music and text as well as music as text in European music are studied. In the two courses, which will be coordinated in terms of content, the focus is first of all on the different strategies of musicalising texts from the Middle Ages to the present day under the conditions of declamation, verse, speech sound, phrase and syntax as well as the possibilities of text-generated musical semantics. Subsequently, specific musical reading skills will be practised on the basis of exemplary scores and the understanding of different types of written music.
Intended learning outcomes
The student has basic experiences of the relationship of music and language as well as the resulting musical compositions and genres. He/she is able to read scores appropriately and to classify them historically as well as to describe and interpret musical textures.

Contents
In this module, a self-written text on a musicological topic is worked on with the support of a supervisor. Under guidance, the candidates choose a suitable subject. The candidates develop and define the question and goal of their project. The candidates write a text that meets academic standards in form and linguistic presentation, taking into account the relevant academic literature and using appropriate methods.
Intended learning outcomes
The candidate has the academic knowledge and methods that enable him/her to work on a defined topic. He/she has the linguistic skills to analyse and present academic and musical contexts. The student is, accompanied by the supervisor, technically and organisationally able to write a musicological study that complies with the rules of good scientific practice.
