Module components 01-ST-GFDG1-1 and 01-ST-GFDG2-1 acquaint students with essential methods in the discipline and discuss relevant issues relating to christology, the doctrine of God, theological anthropology, and the doctrine of the sacraments. In 01-ST-GFDG1-1, the lecture will be accompanied by an exercise.
Intended learning outcomes
At the end of the course, students will have become familiar with the methods typically used in the discipline. They will also be familiar with the biblical foundations for a systematic reflection upon the issues identified above as well as with the decisions of the tradition of the magisterium of the Church that are relevant to them. In addition, students will have developed the ability to determine the relevance of faith to contemporary issues and to theologically justify it.

An advanced knowledge of biblical theology. An insight into the main theological themes of the individual books of the Bible. Old Testament exegesis: the main themes of the historical books (Creation, Exodus, Decalogue, Covenant, Kingdoms), the writing prophets (calling, social criticism, the future of Israel), the wisdom books, and the psalms (theodicy question, justice, Zion, prayer). New Testament exegesis: the theology of the synoptic gospels, the main themes of Pauline theology, and the theology of the Johannine writings.
Intended learning outcomes
At the end of the module, students will have gained an in-depth insight into the theology of the books of the Bible and will have developed advanced knowledge and skills in the area of biblical theology. Students will be able to group the books of the Bible by themes and to interpret them on the basis of specific criteria. They will be able to investigate topics and use methods in both Old and New Testament studies. They will be able to independently analyse exegetical literature and to apply it to the texts and topics discussed, using appropriate methods. Student, who will be expected to plan their learning independently, give presentations, and lead discussions in the courses (seminars), will also have enhanced their personal, interpersonal, and team working skills.

Key topics in systematic theology. The development of fundamental theology in the context of the sub-disciplines within theology as well as its foundations. Important aspects of the biblico-Christian concept of God, arguments for the existence of God, atheist criticism of religion, the diversity of religious beliefs and world views as a modern phenomenon, and the relationship between theology and the natural sciences. Non-Christian world religions, their historical development, and their concepts of God. The Catholic theology of religions and Nostra aetate. Jesus Christ and the origins of the Church, New Testament concepts of the Church, different visions of the Church throughout history, the constitutions of the Vatican Councils. The major schisms in the history of Christianity. The history and goals of the modern ecumenical movement. An introduction to the concept of revelation based on different models of revelation that existed within the history of the Catholic Church. A particular focus is on the texts of the two Vatican Councils and the understanding of revelation expressed in them. Ecclesiology: discussion of ecclesial reality in the context of current problems based on principles in Bible and the history of dogma and in the light of the texts of the Second Vatican Council. Eschatology: methods and hermeneutics as well as issues relating to the Christian hope of judgement.
At the end of the module, students will have been introduced to the God-talk of fundamental theology and will have developed the ability to independently apply what they have learned to contemporary issues. In addition, they will have become familiar with traditional arguments for the existence of God as well as with the Catholic theology of religions and will be able to independently situate themselves within the current debate. They will have become familiar with, and will be able to describe, different considerations in fundamental theology concerning the concept of revelation. Students will have become familiar with the methods typically used in the discipline. They will also be familiar with the biblical foundations for a systematic reflection upon the issues identified above as well as with the decisions of the tradition of the magisterium of the Church that are relevant to them. In addition, students will have developed the ability to determine the relevance of faith to contemporary issues and to theologically justify it.

The lecture discusses selected issues in canon law that relate to topics included in the curricula for Gymnasium schools. Issues to be covered include (but are not limited to): the parish and the diocese, regulations governing the sacraments, the relationship between Church and state as well as marriage and family. The main aim of the lecture is to familiarise students with the principles of canon law that are relevant to the respective topics and to teach students how to teach these topics in a manner that complies with canon law requirements. The module also provides an introduction to the identity of practical theology as an empirically-oriented discipline. The courses in the area of religious education situate the methods in the discipline within the context of standard philosophies of science; they discuss different research methods as well as their advantages and limitations. The courses use examples from research conducted at the Chair or other institutions to illustrate the matter discussed.
At the end of the course, students will have developed a fundamental understanding of the regulations governing the Church and its activities and will be able to reflect upon the normative legal principles that underlie selected issues. Students will have become familiar with key theories in an empirically informed practical theology and will have gained an insight into selected current findings from empirical research. They will have gained an overview of methods of empirical research and will have achieved basic proficiency in these methods.

Discussion of medicine-related issues faced by society that are of interest within the discipline of moral theology based on relevant literature. The module thus covers a range of relevant topics in moral theology and Christian social sciences. In addition, it discusses topics in literary studies, the history of religion, politics, sociology, psychology, and theology.
Intended learning outcomes
At the end of the course, students will have developed an advanced knowledge of key topics and problems in moral theology and social ethics. They will have developed an awareness of the historical development and contexts of relevant literature. They will be able to critically reflect upon issues currently faced by society and take their own well-founded position on them.

Contents
Lecture to acquaint students with the development of church offices and structures in early Christianity and, in particular, with the diversity of offices in early Christianity, the development and establishment of the office of bishop, the supraregional organisation of church structures, the development of patriarchates and the historical development of the claim of supremacy of the Bishop of Rome.
Intended learning outcomes
At the end of the course, students will have become familiar with the development of church offices and structures in the historical context of early Christianity and will be able to communicate information on the topic to others in an appropriate manner. They will understand historicity as a characteristic of the constitution of the Church. Students will have developed an awareness of how the key decisions in this area that set the course for the early Church are conditioned by their historical contexts and will be able to distinguish between this and its claim to transtemporal validity.

ECTS	Method of grading	Only after succ. compl. of module(s)
2	numerical grade	--
Duration	Module level	Other prerequisites
1 semester	undergraduate	--
Contents
Discussion of fundamental issues in the dialogue of religions in the context of key positions developed in the Second Vatican Council (freedom of conscience and of religion, the People of God) and its expressions of appreciation for non-Christian religions. Investigation of the interrelation between politics, religion, and faith and how they impact upon individuals and today's secular society as a whole. Dialogue is about listening to what others have to say.
Intended learning outcomes
We cannot explore issues relating to faith and the meaning of life if we cannot think for ourselves. Faith as a subjective form of knowledge helps students enhance their personal skills as well as their interpersonal skills for interacting with others/individuals practising other faiths or no faith. Developing the ability to see themselves from the point of view of others, students will enhance their capacity for self-criticism. Students will learn to distinguish between the linguistic sign and the signified object or concept.

There are numerous religions, and all of them have been criticised. We live in a world that is religiously plural. But how do the religions themselves deal with religious pluralism? The course discusses phenomena of religious uncertainty - atheism, fundamentalism, syncretism, and pluralism - that can transform any religion into an ideology. Any individual, no matter what his/her religion, may develop a dangerous understanding of faith as an ideology. In this context, we must, and will, also critically examine the traditional concept of Christian mission.
Intended learning outcomes
As we live together as a peaceful society, we are increasingly confronted with atheism, fundamentalism, syncretism, and pluralism. At the end of the course, students will have developed the ability to investigate, and reflect upon, patterns for the justification of ideologies.

Many issues in social ethics are not made explicit. When we investigate them, we are usually required to delve deeper into them. Using the examples of contemporary socio-political problems, this module teaches students how to do so.
Intended learning outcomes
At the end of the module, students will have developed the ability to evaluate the (socio-)ethical content of academic texts, to discuss it in a broader context, and to critically reflect upon it.

Contents
Investigating specific problems in ethics, this module explores the topics discussed in the lecture on the fundamental principles of theological fundamental ethics in more detail and gives students the opportunity to develop a more thorough understanding of different approaches to ethics. The module aims to equip students with a comprehensive theoretical background of topics for the religious education and ethics classroom. Topics to be discussed include: models for the constitution and justification of ethical norms; models in ethics, e. g.: deontological ethics, virtue ethics, discourse ethics; approaches to theological ethics.
Intended learning outcomes
At the end of the course, students will have developed a thorough understanding of key approaches to philosophical and theological ethics. They will have a sound background knowledge that will enable them to teach topics in religion and ethics that are required by the curriculum in an appropriate manner that is tailored to their pupils' needs.

Religious education in modern society must deal with religious and cultural pluralism. This module discusses efforts made to incorporate pluralism into the religious education classroom. It investigates the benefits of pluralism in the religious education classroom and discusses the features of a plural religious education classroom.
Intended learning outcomes
At the end of the course, students will have become familiar with approaches to incorporating anthropological and social pluralism into the religious education classroom. They will be able to formulate the implications of pluralism for religious education and for their own teaching. They will be able to name the features of a plural religious education classroom.

Thesis

(10 ECTS credits)

Preparation of a written Hausarbeit (thesis) in accordance with the provisions of Section 29 LPO I (examination regulations for teaching-degree programmes) is a prerequisite for teaching degree students to be admitted to the Erste Staatsprüfung (First State Examination). In accordance with the provisions of Section 29 LPO I, students studying for a teaching degree Gymnasium may write this thesis in one of the subjects they selected as vertieft studiertes Fach (subject studied with a focus on the scientific discipline) or in the subject Erziehungswissenschaften (Educational Science). Pursuant to Section 29 Subsection 1 Sentence 2 LPO I, students may also choose to write an interdisciplinary thesis.
