Course of Studies - Contents and Objectives

The Master's degree Ethnomusicology/Transcultural Music Studies qualifies students for music-oriented professions and for further research. The field of study imparts knowledge in contemporary and historical Ethnomusicology. Students acquire analytical, aesthetic, and systematic sociological knowledge of at least one regional culture, as well as global music, especially of the 19th, 20th, and 21st centuries. Graduates are expected to show knowledge of interdisciplinary theory, ethnomusicological practice, and intercultural transfer phenomena. Moreover, they are expected to show an extensive competence in multimedia communication and presentation. Two programs (Transcultural Music Studies or Field work) provide the possibility of further specialization. The individually chosen profile is documented by the modules in the Transcript of Records. Graduates are qualified for a wide spectrum of highly skilled professions in the fields of media, planning and organization of concerts and music theatre, music publishing, cultural practice, and music research. The qualification is also a prerequisite for doctoral programs in music, culture and media.

Other: A = thesis, LV = course(s), PL = assessment(s), TN = participants, VL = prerequisite(s)

Conventions

Unless otherwise stated, courses and assessments will be held in German, assessments will be offered every semester and modules are not creditable for bonus.

Notes

Should there be the option to choose between several methods of assessment, the lecturer will agree with the module coordinator on the method of assessment to be used in the current semester by two weeks after the start of the course at the latest and will communicate this in the customary manner.

Should the module comprise more than one graded assessment, all assessments will be equally weighted, unless otherwise stated below.

Should the assessment comprise several individual assessments, successful completion of the module will require successful completion of all individual assessments.

In accordance with the general regulations governing the degree subject described in this module catalogue:

This module deals with music as a phenomenon of everyday human culture. The focus is on the European cultural area, but globalisation, inter- and transculturation processes make it necessary to look beyond the borders of Europe.
Intended learning outcomes
The student acquires intercultural competences with a European focus and a perspective going beyond the borders of Europe. He/she is able to make theoretically sound statements about music as an everyday culture.

The students should independently organise a field research project during the semester or semester break. Observations, impressions and results are communicated to the fellow students during the seminar and presented in the form of a field research report. Knowledge that has already been acquired in previous modules as well as acquired cultural-anthropological and ethnographic skills will be applied in practice.
Intended learning outcomes
The student is equipped with the necessary academic and organisational skills to independently plan, conduct, archive and evaluate field research.

This module is designed for students that will concentrate on the main focus of Transcultural Music Studies. It deals with the inter- and transcultural exchange of musical styles and phenomena, which became particularly noticeable from the 19th century onwards. The focus lies either on non-European film music or musical syntheses from a global perspective.
Intended learning outcomes
In addition to the acquisition of comprehensive intercultural competence, the student is qualified to understand and analyse synthetic processes between global musical genres as well as to classify them into their cultural-historical context on the basis of selected examples.

In this module a self-written text on an ethnomusicological topic will be worked out with the support of a tutor*. Under guidance, the candidates will choose a suitable subject. The students develop and define the question and aim of their project. The candidates will write a text that meets academic standards in terms of method and linguistic presentation, taking into account the relevant academic literature and applying appropriate methods, including the evaluation of field research material if necessary.
Intended learning outcomes
The candidate acquires the academic knowledge and methods that enable him/her to work on a defined topic. He/she has the linguistic skills to analyse and present ethnomusicological issues. With the support of the supervisor, he/she is technically and organisationally able to write an ethnomusicological study that complies with the rules of good scientific practice.

This module studies the human being in its relationship to its music as one of the most important cultural components as well as the mutual relationship between music producers, recipients and musical products. In particular, the different musical concepts, musical actions, physical, psychological, verbal, symbolic and social behaviour and musical manifestations will be covered.
Intended learning outcomes
The student is able to theorise and exemplarily explain the reciprocity of music, music production and music reception. He/she has acquired music conceptual, psychological, sociological, semantic and action-theoretical competences, weighted differently depending on the specific subject, in order to systematically describe the connection between people and music.

The module covers phenomena of popular music in a global context. The contents focus on the reception of non-European music in Europe and North America as well as the analysis of non-European musicians with Western popular music, the resulting cooperations and syntheses. Aesthetic, commercial and media-technical aspects are taken into account. Music as an anthropological phenomenon is a primary criterion in the construction of cultural identities. At the same time it proves to be a carrier of intercultural transfer processes. The module develops central theoretical principles of cultural transfer research in an exemplary manner.
Intended learning outcomes
The student acquires intercultural competences. He/she is qualified to theoretically identify general discourses between music cultures and specific intercultural reception and assimilation mechanisms, e.g. specific manifestations of a "Global Pop", and to provide them by using examples.

In this module, the central theoretical and practical features of ethnomusicological regional research will be covered taking into account the methods of affine cultural studies and humanities disciplines. Music is treated not only as an aesthetic phenomenon, but also in its respective anthropological, socio-cultural and religious context. The basics of the study of performance and historical performance practice in traditional cultures should also be taught.
Intended learning outcomes
The student is qualified to theoretically identify the basics of musical regional research and, if necessary, general discourses of historical performance practice on the basis of a specific regional culture. A target here can also be the acquisition of practical music competences.

This module is offered by the Institute for Media Didactics. The students learn how to handle sound and image recording devices. They will become acquainted with the work in a sound studio and become familiar with the hardware and software used there (for post-processing, editing etc.)
Intended learning outcomes
The student acquires knowledge in the field of sound and image processing. He/she is prepared for the phase after the completed field research and is technically able to handle the collected ethnographic material and to process and present it appropriately.

The various theories and methods underlying ethnomusicological research in its comparative as well as historical dimension will be developed. In terms of content, the focus will be on cultural, music anthropological and sociological aspects, as well as ethnographic methods of field research and techniques of transcription and documentation of orally transmitted music. The module is also dedicated to the phenomenon of musical writing in a global context. The different approaches to notation (descriptive/prescriptive) will be discussed and illustrated by means of examples.
Intended learning outcomes
The student has acquired basic music anthropological and ethnographic competences. He/she has learnt how to deal with traditional (music) cultures and is qualified to theoretically identify general discourses of musical writing and to provide them by using examples. The student is able to transfer foreign musical notation into a musical notation they are familiar with.

In this module, the sources, musical testimonies and cultural-historical conditions of European music history from antiquity to the end of the Middle Ages (around 1420) and their music-historiographical interpretation are studied. The focus is on phenomena and historical processes in the field of music and musical thinking. Using significant examples, specific methods of the Humanities (such as philological, descriptive, comparative and analytical working methods) and of speaking about music (such as specialist terminology and use of metaphor) are taught, reflected and practised.
Intended learning outcomes
The student has in-depth knowledge of European music history from antiquity to the end of the Middle Ages, its sources and its phenomena. He/she is able to classify these in a reflected manner into historical contexts. The student is familiar with key problems of music historical research within this period. On this basis, he/she is able to present and interpret music-historical phenomena independently, sophisticatedly and method-consciously.

Contents
In this module, the sources, musical testimonies and cultural-historical conditions of European music history from antiquity to the end of the Middle Ages (around 1420) and their music-historiographical interpretation are studied. The focus is on phenomena and historical processes in the field of music and musical thinking. Using significant examples, specific methods of the Humanities (such as philological, descriptive, comparative and analytical working methods) and of speaking about music (such as specialist terminology and use of metaphor) are taught, reflected and practised.
Intended learning outcomes
The student has in-depth knowledge of European music history from antiquity to the end of the Middle Ages, its sources and its phenomena. He/she is able to classify these in a reflected manner into historical contexts. The students is familiar with key problems of music historical research within this period. On this basis, he/she is able to present and interpret music-historical phenomena independently, sophisticatedly and method-consistently.
