Course of Studies - Contents and Objectives

The Master's degree "English and American Studies" is an academic degree qualifying for a career in universities and research institutions, or for professional employment outside academia. Students learn to critically analyse and evaluate literary, cultural, and linguistic phenomena in the cultural, historical, social, and political contexts of the English-speaking world. Students will be introduced to the field in its entirety, while at the same time they will have the opportunity to focus on selected aspects within the disciplines involved (American Studies, English Literary and Cultural Studies, English Linguistics).

With the Master's thesis students demonstrate their ability to independently conduct thematic research, apply adequate methods, and develop a critical argument (c. 50 pages) within a restricted time frame. The final exam (colloquium) in the fields of American Studies and English Studies evaluates the student's general, disciplinary knowledge.

More specifically, the program is designed to teach and develop the following skills:

- knowledge of the literature, culture, and linguistic phenomena of the English-speaking world;
- knowledge of the theories, methods, and current research interests of American Studies, English Literary and Cultural Studies, and English Linguistics;
- ability to critically engage with, and to analyze and interpret linguistic, literary, and cultural phenomena and problems in their historical and intellectual dimensions;
- analytical as well as research skills and familiarization with linguistic and/or literary and cultural developments specific to the English-speaking world;
- ability to produce complex texts in English.

Conventions

Unless otherwise stated, courses and assessments will be held in German, assessments will be offered every semester and modules are not creditable for bonus.

Notes

Should there be the option to choose between several methods of assessment, the lecturer will agree with the module coordinator on the method of assessment to be used in the current semester by two weeks after the start of the course at the latest and will communicate this in the customary manner.

Should the module comprise more than one graded assessment, all assessments will be equally weighted, unless otherwise stated below.

Should the assessment comprise several individual assessments, successful completion of the module will require successful completion of all individual assessments.

In accordance with the general regulations governing the degree subject described in this module catalogue:

The module covers the most important literary and theoretical trends of the 20th and 21st century in-depth, which will be applied on the basis of detailed text analyses. This includes, inter alia, Structuralism, Post-Structuralism, New Criticism, Deconstruction, Gender Studies or New Historicism. Hence, the significance of literary theory in order to understand the processes of creative writing as well as of the academic dealing with literature will be critically discussed and evaluated. Next to the traditional theories, the current state of research (e.g. Queer theory, ecocriticism) will be displayed and discussed, too.
Intended learning outcomes
After successful completion of the module, students will be able to - read and understand complex theoretical texts in general, - describe complex issues, models, methods, terminologies and theories of literature and to critically reflect and abstract them, - apply literary theories to the analysis of texts in British literature independently, provided that abilities, such as the close reading, will be consolidated. Moreover, they are skilled regarding hermeneutic competencies.
