Studies
Responsible: Institute of German Studies

Course of Studies - Contents and Objectives

The goal of the degree programme is to equip students with consolidated knowledge and skills in the academic study of German language and literature. Broadening both their methodological skills and their theoretical knowledge and being introduced to additional examples and topics, students will become familiar, in different dimensions, with the methods and objectives of current research in the field of German studies. Graduates of this programme will

- have acquired a comprehensive knowledge, consolidated by way of examples, of the history of German literature, from early to contemporary works, in the context of the history of European literature, ideas and culture.
- have become familiar with research-oriented aspects of the didactics of language and literature in institutional and media contexts.
- have acquired a consolidated research-oriented knowledge of both contemporary and historical literary theory.
- have acquired a consolidated research-oriented knowledge of the fundamental disciplines rhetoric, poetics/aesthetics, narratology.
- have developed and practised an increased and intensified awareness of issues regarding the scientific formation of concepts and fixing of terminology (epochs, genres, methodologies).
- have consolidated their reading and translation skills in earlier historical stages of the German language.
- have developed and practised an increased and intensified awareness of the alterity of medieval literature.
- have acquired consolidated research-oriented skills to reflect on literary texts in their constructedness and to discuss literary texts in their historical contexts.
- have acquired consolidated research-oriented skills to appropriately delineate problems, both orally and in writing, and to present these - using media support - in a target-group-specific manner.
- have enhanced their discursive skills, e. g. by actively participating in courses.
- have acquired - by intensifying their basic knowledge - a consolidated research-oriented knowledge of the different systematic levels of the German language (phonology, orthography, morphology, syntax, semantics, pragmatics, text types).
- have acquired a consolidated research-oriented knowledge of the major historical lines of development of the German language with regard to both historical stages of the German language (Old High German, Middle High German, Early New High German, New High German) and longitudinal developments in the areas of phonology, graphemics, morphology, syntax, semantics and pragmatics.
- have developed and practised an increased awareness of problems and research methods in the field of linguistics as well as theoretical approaches to linguistics.
- have acquired a consolidated and intensified research-oriented knowledge of major research paradigms in contemporary German linguistics.
- have acquired consolidated research-oriented skills to grasp, analyse and reflect on contemporary linguistic utterances transmitted through different media with regard to their constituent linguistic features using an arsenal of linguistic methods.

Contents
Consolidation and extension of generic text skills about the acquired basic contents during the bachelor degree course and beyond; Consolidation and extension of literary methodological competence; Introduction to and critical engagement with current research questions.
Intended learning outcomes
Students are acquainted with different literary methods and analytical concepts and know, how to apply these skills to historical texts independently. They will acquire the ability to classify the results of their independent analysis in a bigger literary or discourse-historical context as well as the ability to deal independently with basic and current issues of research and to present these issues independently. They are familiar with methods of the self-organisation and time management and are able to compile individual articles for research under tutelage.

Consolidation and application of ideas, approaches and methods of the teaching methodology German (linguistic and literature/media teaching incl. children and youth literature) including technical contents for the scholastic and extracurricular teaching practice; Theoretical principles and empirical findings for the linguistic and literary socialisation including the media change (incl. literature for children and young adults and new media) as well as the condition of target-oriented mediation processes in an institutional context; Ideas and practice-oriented contexts of oral or written communication in a cultural context as well as the acquisition processes of literary or linguistic knowledge including the historical change of text production, text reception and language; Differentiated methodical repertoire of actions.
Students consolidate their knowledge and research-oriented qualifications relating to the German subject didactics (linguistic and literature/media didactics incl. children's and youth literature) in order to extend their subject-specific and contemplation competencies for mediation processes in different institutional contexts. Next to references of theory and practical experiences, students will particularly acquire current empirical findings from the teaching and learning research and apply them to mediation practices in a subject-specific contouring. On the basis of current research literature, students will acquire the required comprehensive skills, which they present in an appropriate way and dialogically interview about possibilities to affiliate the mediation practice during the course. Acquisition, imparting, presentation and assessment of contents will be seen as extensions of self-competence taking account of subject-specific contents. Moreover, students acquire knowledge of imparting-associated, empirical established perception and control of subject-specific teaching and learning processes in pedagogical contexts.
