Course of Studies - Contents and Objectives

The Master's degree programme Griechische Philologie (Greek Philology) equips Greek philology majors with general information and data gathering skills and an advanced knowledge of the Ancient Greek language and enables them to develop a combined scholarly profile. While those sections of the programme that develop the students' language skills focus on grammar, translation, and the investigation of the meaning of texts of high difficulty, the sections developing the students' knowledge and skills in the academic discipline focus on linguistics, literature as well as classical studies and/or general cultural studies.

The Master's programme systematically consolidates the Ancient Greek language skills Greek philology majors have developed in the Bachelor's programme. It equips students with comprehensive skills in the analytical and hermeneutic reading of literary texts from Greek antiquity and investigates the reception of these texts in antiquity, the Middle Ages, and the modern period.

While the information gathering and presentation skills (portfolio, position paper with presentation, term paper) students develop while studying in this programme are useful for virtually all career paths that involve the gathering, processing, and communication of information, the traditional areas of employment for graduates of this programme include (in addition to research and higher education) publishing, continuing education, and the management of institutions in the cultural and tourism sectors.

The Master's programme focuses, among other aspects, on connections between literature and the philosophical argument, a key research interest of the Chair offering the programme. This also involves the investigation of the material prerequisites for textual transmission. Skilled in working with and editing texts from antiquity, using modern methods, state-of-the-art interdisciplinary information-gathering techniques as well as the electronic tools of their discipline, graduates of this programme are well-equipped for a career in academia or academic publishing. Exploring selected aspects of the ancient knowledge that is preserved in the literature of Greece, the programme equips students with the ability to assess and historically contextualise thought patterns beyond their everyday experience. First, students explore these aspects under guidance; later on, they conduct their research increasingly independently.

One focus of the programme is on textual transmission and, in particular, on philosophical texts preserved on papyrus. Investigating texts from a range of schools of Greek philosophy, students develop the ability to assess current ethical issues in the context of ancient reflections. The programme takes phenomena of reception in a range of epochs into account and thus makes structures clear, not only but also from a diachronic point of view, and trains students in (inter)cultural transfer. It provides an ideal basis for developing a deeper understanding of European literatures and cultures as well as phenomena such as the oriental roots of Greek thought, the spread of Greek culture (Hellenisation), or the influence of Greek culture in the Roman Empire. This deeper understanding of European culture is a prerequisite for intercultural dialogue beyond the European context.

Graduates of this programme have developed an advanced knowledge of Greek philology, they have gained insights into related disciplines, and have developed the ability to independently apply the research methods they have acquired at university to complex problems. Graduates of this programme have obtained an internationally comparable degree in Greek philology and, having successfully completed a Bachelor's and consecutive Master's programme, qualify for admission to a doctoral programme.

Contents

The module provides students with skills of the Egyptian art history and monumental knowledge. Be it the area of architecture, plastics, relief art or painting, some typical issues of the Egyptian art history are covered in detail in the offered courses. Thus, questions of the iconography will be discussed. Skills of the Egyptian language are not required for courses of this module, but would be desirable. A part of the module can be a trip to an Egyptian collection or to Egypt.

Intended learning outcomes

Students have an overview of facts, research issues and technical literature concerning the Egyptian history of art. They have knowledge of monumental skills and are able to critically regard the specialised literature. They are familiar with the stylised development of Egyptian art in its fundamental principles. They are able to correctly interpret the most important iconographic features of Egyptian art.

Hittite, which is the earliest attested language of the Indo-European family of languages, was written in Babylonian cuneiform. Thus, the Hittite culture forms an established component of the cuneiform culture. The module gives an introduction to the grammar and vocabulary of the Hittite language as well as the cuneiform in which it was written and reinforces the acquired knowledge with the reading of simple Hittite historical and/or legal texts.

Intended learning outcomes

The student will acquire an overview of the structure of the Hittite language and especially of the criteria necessary for the analysis of forms as well as the ability to use the most important resources (grammars, dictionaries, bibliographies, text editions).
He/she will be able
(1) to attach possessive suffixes to nouns and to decline these,
(2) to analyse and translate verb forms,
(3) to analyse conjunctions with enclitics,
(4) to construct logical sentences from given lexemes and to translate these,
(5) to transliterate, analyse and translate Hittite cuneiform texts from the class curriculum.

The Sumerian language, which is not related to any other known language, is the oldest written language of the ancient Near East. This module gives an introduction to the grammar and vocabulary of Sumerian as well as to the cuneiform in which it was written; the knowledge to be acquired by the student is reinforced through the reading of simple Sumerian royal inscriptions. Emphasis is placed upon the Neo-Sumerian grammar, which is employed in the inscriptions of Gudea of Lagas and elsewhere.

Intended learning outcomes

The student will acquire an overview of the structure of the Sumerian language and especially of the criteria necessary for the analysis of forms as well as the ability to use the most important resources (grammars, dictionaries, bibliographies, text editions).
He/she will be able
(1) to create reasonable genitive constructions in different cases from given nouns and to translate these,
(2) to combine given substantives with pronominal suffixes and case endings and to translate these, to analyse verbal forms and to translate these,
(3) to read and translate simple royal inscriptions from the original cuneiform writing.

The Sumerian language, which is not related to any other known language, is the oldest written language of the ancient Near East. This module expands upon the introduction to the grammar and the vocabulary of Sumerian and the cuneiform in which it was written; the knowledge to be developed by the student is reinforced through the reading of simple Sumerian texts from various genres. Emphasis is placed upon the Neo-Sumerian grammar, which is employed in the inscriptions of Gudea of Lagas and elsewhere. In addition to the linguistic analysis of the texts, the inscriptions will also be considered from the perspective of political history, the history of religion and historical topography.

Intended learning outcomes

The student will acquire an overview of the structure of the Sumerian language and especially of the criteria necessary for the analysis of forms as well as the ability to use the most important resources (grammars, dictionaries, bibliographies, text editions).

Master's thesis: With the help of academic methods, students will deal with a specific problem within a fixed period of time, which is determined by the ASPO. In the case of a Master with two main disciplines, an issue can be given that covers a problem, which affects both main disciplines interdisciplinarily. The topic is to be agreed upon with an authorised examiner or, in the case of an interdisciplinary thesis, 2 authorised examiners. Final oral examination: The candidate has to work on two Greek issues. Usually, two main topics that are proposed by the candidate, will be agreed upon with an authorised examiner (which will consist of one representative of Greek prose literature and of Greek poetry). The basic selection of text outputs and academic literature, which is the basis for dealing with subjects, will be agreed upon with the candidates and examiners. The oral examination focuses on the translation ability, technical knowledge and its academical classification as well as on an appropriate representation in words.

Intended learning outcomes

Master's thesis: Students are able to work on a specific issue of Latin Philology with the help of academic methods and they are able to present their results in writing appropriately. Final oral examination: The candidate is expected to have a comprehensive linguistic and contentual knowledge of selected issues. The candidate is able to understand, classify and critically apply the skills that have already been acquired, adequately and academically. The candidate is able to translate a text passage competently, to reply to questions in free speech and to contribute to an academic and professional exchange during a dialogue competently.

Contents

Within a seminar, students will deal in-depth with complex academic issues of literary history or text interpretation, which will be completed by the attendance of a literary lecture, systematically and historically. They will present complex academic issues and subsequent drawing up of a written draft orally.

Intended learning outcomes

Students deal with complex academic issues as well as their application on literary and academic texts from Greek antiquity autonomously. They are able to script complex academic issues independently.
