The press, cinema, radio, TV, and even computers and the internet are often suspected to solely entertain users, thereby undermining a critical, objective and reflective examination of the information given. As a consequence, entertainment is often thought to be a threat to the information function of media. Formerly neglected by most researchers, there has been a rising interest in the scientific understanding of entertainment. This course offers an insight into the current state of entertainment research.
Intended learning outcomes
Students should consolidate their specialist knowledge in the field of mediated entertainment and should thus develop an advanced understanding of the development and logic of research projects in this area.

This module provides an insight in the current state of research in learning and instruction using new media. Students will deal with psychological theories and empirical evidence from e-learning research. They will focus on innovative learning arrangements, e. g. pedagogical agents, virtual tutors, personalised learning environments or augmented reality. Topics will be critically discussed on the basis of current research articles, reviews and meta-analyses.
Intended learning outcomes
Students learn about the current state of eLearning research. They are able to understand research articles, reflect on and question their results and outline practical implications. Students are thus able to develop their own research questions in instructional psychology and to evaluate the quality of concrete eLearning measures from a researcher's point of view.

In the module, students work on a problem from a special field of the four core professorships of the program. In doing so, they apply the standard methods of the subject. The duration of this module is limited to a defined period of time. The students are supervised by one of the four core professorships.
Intended learning outcomes
Students are able to identify a scientifically relevant question, they can research, describe and evaluate the state of research in order to derive research desiderata and research questions. They develop a methodical approach and test hypotheses/answer the research question. The goal is a significant gain in knowledge. In empirical work, students learn to collect data for hypothesis testing and analyze data in a methodologically correct way. They can then use the results to answer the research question. Further, students can formulate scientific papers according to the requirements of the subject.

Students will choose one out of the four core areas of the degree programme (media psychology, communication science, computer science in media, instructional psychology). In the selected area, the students will develop, in small groups, their own research project. This project provides them with an opportunity to apply their subject-specific knowledge as well as their skills in methodology and statistics. Over the course of this module, students will go through all stages of a research project.
Intended learning outcomes
Students apply their acquired knowledge (content-related, methodological, statistical) to research practice by developing their own empirical research project. In doing so, they experience every single step of the research process - from the idea through to the documentation of the results.

Human-Computer Interaction is concerned with the design, evaluation and implementation of interactive computing systems for human use and with the study of major phenomena surrounding them. This course gives an introduction into the principle biological, physiological, and psychological constraints as defined by the human user and relates these constraints to the conceptual and technical solutions of today's computer systems and existing as well as prospective interaction metaphors between humans and computers. The course covers topics about human perception and cognition, memory and attention, the design of interactive systems, prominent evaluation methods, the principles of computer systems, typical input processing techniques, interface technology, and examples of typical interaction metaphors, from text-based input to graphical desktops to multimodal interfaces. Accompanying lab-work will introduce students to typical tasks involved in this field, i.e., prominent evaluation methods and prototyping of interfaces.
Intended learning outcomes
After the course, the students will have a broad understanding of the underlying principles of human users and computer systems. They will understand the constraints and capabilities of current user interfaces and they will learn about the necessary steps applied in user-centered design and development approaches.

E-business is a comprehensive, digital processing of business transactions between private and public enterprises as well as institutions and their clients on global public and private networks such as the internet. Precisely because euphoria for e-business has waned considerably in recent years, a lot of emphasis is now being placed on introducing such solutions in a user-oriented way. This lecture will first discuss the supporting economic theories and will then describe and analyse individual solutions such as e-procurement, e-shop, e-marketplace and e-community in detail.
Intended learning outcomes
The module provides students with knowledge about: (i) E-Procurement (ii) E-Shop (iii) E-Marketplace (iv) E-Community

"Business Engineering" refers to the method and model-based design theory for companies in the information age. "Forward" refers to design methods (such as situation analysis, requirements analysis and business process modelling) that help implement a new solution. "Reverse" refers to approaches (such as the use and process analysis) that make it possible to improve or re-design existing structures and processes. Market requirements and technological innovation potential are typical reasons for the continuous transformation of a company. The resulting change needs to be implemented into the organisational structure, business processes and information systems. The course traces the implementation cycle of enterprise software from the point of view of a member of a project team. In addition to acquainting students with the theoretical basis of adaptation, the course will also discuss examples from practical projects.
Intended learning outcomes
The "Forward und Reverse Business Engineering" module aims to achieve the following learning outcomes: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. Students acquire profound expertise in the process of adapting business software libraries and learn how to apply this knowledge to practical scenarios.</li> <li>2. Mastery of forward engineering methods such as situation analysis, requirements analysis, process modeling, and business blueprinting, as well as reverse engineering methods like reverse business engineering and their practical implementation in corresponding tools.</li> <li>3. Students develop interdisciplinary methodological skills that enable them to independently and flexibly tackle complex challenges. This includes, in particular, the application of the aforementioned methods of forward and reverse engineering</li> </ol>

This course provides an overview of the field of modern labor economics. The course will cover the following topics: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. Labor supply</li> <li>2. Labor demand</li> <li>3. Human capital formation</li> <li>4. Compensating wage differentials</li> <li>5. Discrimination</li> </ol> The course will consist of frontal teaching of the basic theoretical as well as empirical tools as well as a careful reading of some of the key scientific articles related to the outlined topics. Students are expected to read the scientific articles in advance and will be asked to discuss them in small groups during class. In addition, a discussion of the articles will help illustrating how established scholars approach the core questions in modern labor economics and giving students an understanding of high quality empirical research. The main reference for the lecture is Cahuc and Zylberberg. (2004): "Labor Economics", 1st edition, Massachusetts Institute of Technology. In addition, we will discuss well-published economic articles related to the single topics discussed in class.
Intended learning outcomes
The aim of this course is to acquaint students with classical as well as modern topics in labor economics and to encourage the development of research interest in this field. As such, the course's objective is to familiarize students with both the core theoretical models of labor economics as well as the main econometric methods used to provide empirical evidence.
