for the Subject
Musicology
as a minor in a Bachelor's degree programme
(60 ECTS credits)

Examination regulations version: 2008
Responsible: Faculty of Arts, Historical, Philological, Cultural and Geographical Studies
Responsible: Institute for Musical Research

Course of Studies - Contents and Objectives

The Bachelor programme Musicology imparts fundamental scientific knowledge, familiarity with the most important methods in the subject and practice-related skills. Students acquire a broadly-based foundation in the areas of earlier and modern music history, music and media, ethnomusicology, systematic musicology, music theory and applied musicology. They furthermore obtain a wider qualification, in the sense of optional individual emphases, in a selection of the fields named. Graduates of this course of studies are equipped for a spectrum of activities in the field of media, music publishing and scientifically-based cultural activities. At the same time, the programme provides a qualification for a wide range of Master programmes in music, culture and media.

Conventions

Unless otherwise stated, courses and assessments will be held in German, assessments will be offered every semester and modules are not creditable for bonus.

Notes

Should there be the option to choose between several methods of assessment, the lecturer will agree with the module coordinator on the method of assessment to be used in the current semester by two weeks after the start of the course at the latest and will communicate this in the customary manner.

Should the module comprise more than one graded assessment, all assessments will be equally weighted, unless otherwise stated below.

Should the assessment comprise several individual assessments, successful completion of the module will require successful completion of all individual assessments.

The module focuses on elementary musical and musicological practices. On the one hand, the everyday linguistic and popular-scientific verbalisation of music is problematised; on the other hand, the experience of music is deepened through active participation in ensembles (choir, orchestra) or practical work on current projects at the Institute of Musicology.
Intended learning outcomes
The student has actively gained experience in dealing with music and has learnt to articulate these experiences appropriately in language. As a result, he/she is able to speak in a disciplined manner about musical matters; Furthermore, he/she has trained social competence in aesthetic terms.

The module provides the students with the basics of musicological thinking. In the context of the Humanities, Cultural Studies, Social and Natural Sciences, Musicology studies the diverse physiological, acoustic, ideal, historical and regional conditions, phenomena and forms of music. The diversity of musical forms at all historical stages and in all cultures requires not only for a rationally founded order of phenomena, but also for a pragmatic fragmentation of the wealth of subject matter. This need is reflected in the internal disciplinary division into four interlinked areas of work. These are characterised by their fundamental questions: Historical Musicology by the question of the emergence and development of musical processes, Systematic Musicology by the question of the physiological, acoustic and sociological basics of music, music education by the question of conveying practical and theoretical knowledge of music, and Ethnomusicology by the question of the forms of musical expression, functions and structures of music in the various religions and cultures of the world. Musicology as a discipline aims at an integral view of musical phenomena, which means that the internal subjects have a centripetal rather than a centrifugal effect.
The student is able to deal with the fundamental problems of Musicology in a reflected manner: overview of the subject areas of the four sub-fields of Musicology; knowledge of their basic methods; application of working procedures to specific paradigms of history, Systematics, Pedagogy and Ethnomusicology.

The module deals with the basics of musical analysis, with focus on the relationship between language and music (madrigal, song, opera) in one module component and instrumental musical forms, techniques or genres in another module component. Basic analytical techniques and methods are presented and practiced in exemplary sample analyses.
The student is able to independently analyse musical works of the modern tonal repertoire. He/she has the ability to recognise and interpret the specific problems of verse setting and word-music correspondence in the musical text; He/she discusses the problems of the basics of formal theory (motif, theme, phrase structure, sonata main movement) and compositional technique and is able to assess the relevance of different analytical methods for the corresponding works.

On the interface with Anthropology, Musicology studies the question of the extent to which music has significance for what human is (theoretical perspective) and what the human can do (practical perspective). Music Anthropology attempts to develop the concept of music from the perspective of cultic and political-social contexts of action, identification patterns and the judgement formation (utility value). Using case studies, the module provides an overview of music anthropological positions and their methods; on the pragmatics of musical performance from the cult to the music industry; on positions on the relationship between music consciousness, musical self-confidence and intercultural awareness, their research methods and objects.
The student has a reliable orientation about positions and methods of music anthropological research. He/she is able to use case studies to explain the pragmatics of musical performance; The student is able to critically present the relationship of music consciousness, self-consciousness and intercultural consciousness using case studies.

The module is dedicated to the relationship between music and society from a historical and systematic perspective. The subject matter is the analysis of European musical cultures in various historical contexts, especially the relationship between the respective producers and recipients of music, their mutual dependencies and the associated musical institutions such as church, concert, opera, bourgeois salon up to modern institutions of popular and light music. In addition to traditional historical methods of analysis, specific techniques of empirical research such as observation, questioning and experimentation are applied.
The student possesses the ability to independently recognise music sociological phenomena, to formulate corresponding hypotheses and thus, to create an adequate research design. He/she is able to apply empirical methods of data collection, their evaluation and descriptive presentation in textual or graphic form.

The module focuses on the consideration of music on the interfaces with Cultural Studies, historical and philosophical Anthropology. As an example, a topic or object is chosen that makes the connection between cultural phenomena or developments and the production or reception of music appear significant.
Intended learning outcomes
The student is able to assess the connection between cultural phenomena in the broader sense and the production and reception of music in the narrower sense in a differentiated way and to describe it adequately on the basis of selected examples.

Making music, singing and dancing are individual aspects of musical performance, which as a field of movement and action is embedded in ritualised and staged contexts of cycles in a culturally specific way. Rituals present their own space, their own time and their own perception. As rituals, such music-related events represent cultic, sacred or profane forms of expression which -- in repeated and recurring sequences -- symbolically hand down social and aesthetic values and norms as well as aspects of the world views on which they are based. The aim of the module is to show the diversity of musical-ritual group behaviour, to demonstrate functional multidimensionality in an exemplary way and to learn to understand it in its cultural and intercultural context. In particular, the different and overlapping levels of understanding and functions of music, dance and singing in cultural, intercultural and globalised contexts will be observed, analysed and interpreted in terms of their multiple coding.
The student understands how to exemplify the relationship of music and ritual in its multidimensionality. He/she has a differentiated knowledge of the functions of music, dance and song in a cultural, intercultural and globalised context.

Presentation of the history of music from the early modern period to the present on the basis of an integrative interpretation of cultural history. The focus is on central forms, styles, persons of European music history and the presentation of selected music cultural centres. Epochal terms (Renaissance, Enlightenment, Classicism, Romanticism, Modernism, Postmodernism) and concepts or metaphors of historical processes (progress, development, discursive rupture, history of paradigms) are problematised. Using historically significant examples, the interrelation of a problematic history of composing with music theoretical and music aesthetic reflection and polemics will be shown.
The student is able to deal with central phenomena of music and music history from the early modern period to the present in a reflected manner; He/she has basic knowledge of the historical forms of appearance of European music and an understanding of the music-historical processes. He/she is able to discuss the problems of these in basic terms of cultural history.

The module deals with problems in the relationship between music and socio-culturally shaped concepts of space in an exemplary manner. This includes -- optionally, depending on the nature of the chosen subject matter -- concepts of the cultural term "Region" and methods and aims of regional music research; Urbanism (especially the specificity of musical centres) and the reflection on the relationship between cultural centre and periphery; Questions of spatial sociology including historical concepts of space and topics (spatial ordering systems and mappings), social spaces with their specific music; Approaches of promenadology in connection with the concept of soundscapes; Finally an aesthetics and poetics of space related to the social space (G. Bachelard), insofar as it shapes musical concepts in a significant way.
The student understands the relationship of music and place in a multi-layered way by learning to differentiate concepts of place, space* and region socio-culturally, historically and aesthetically. He/she is able to understand and describe "space" as something that is not given in advance, but as a cultural construction and something that has become.

The student excursion module provides access to local knowledge. It consists of the preparation and execution of a musicological excursion, which - depending on the subject matter - familiarises students with musical centres and their institutions, with music historical sources and monuments, or with the musical culture of a region.
Intended learning outcomes
The student has in-depth knowledge of musical centres and spaces through experience, is familiar with their institutions and repertoires, has insight into the cultural infrastructure and thereby sets the foundation for academic and professionally relevant contacts at an early stage. He/she deals with the material traces of music history on site in an appropriate, informed, communicative and competent manner. If the module has an ethnological focus, the student has experience in the application of field research methods and in personal contact with musicians and researchers from abroad.
